

Ngatikahungunu then began to speak, but as they entered into long details of their own letters, and Renata's speech, which was read at full length, I came away at one o'clock, taking a friendly hint from Karaitiana that as I had expressed my opinions, and opened the subject, they would get on better without me.

I forgot to mention that Heta Tauranga was called upon to read the Governor's letter to Matutaera, and then another, in which he said it was promised that the troops should not go to the Ia.

I asked whether it was from Governor Browne or Governor Grey, and settled the point by referring to the date, Oct. 3rd, 1860.

An old man ingeniously said, that they had been often told, that though the Treaty at Waitangi was made by Governor Hobson, it was binding on all the Governors.

I then left the meeting and came on to Tamahui.

My general impressions are,

1. That the meeting was much more orderly, temperate, and friendly than heretofore.
 2. That there was no perceptible abatement of tenaciousness as to the King.
 3. That the most noisy and rigorous opposition came from new members from the East Coast.
 4. That among all the Tribes there is an acknowledgment of the necessity of one law for both races.
 5. That the difficulty is to reconcile the Unity of Law with the Duality of Mana.
 6. That it will not be impossible to bring about a compromise on the basis proposed by the Duke of Newcastle.
 7. That there is absolutely no trace of an hostility of Race: and no unanimity even on the subject of a division of races.
