Dunedin Hospital, 25th May, 1893.

The two new wards added to this hospital are the finest in the colony. One of the old wards ought to be utilised for a children's ward. The country ought not to be asked to provide any more accommodation at this institution for a long time to come. The money already granted by the Government has caused such a number of demands for additional accommodation in other places as to make it quite impossible to satisfy them.

The new matron is efficient, and is, I believe, giving universal satisfaction. The institution, as a whole, as well as the medical school attached to it, deserve the confidence of the public.
