and which, therefore, has been the subject of much discussion. It is a question of the relative importance of the various factors which enter into the determination of the rate of interest. The factors which are usually mentioned are the demand for money, the supply of money, the rate of discount, the rate of profit, and the rate of interest on government securities. The rate of interest on government securities is usually the lowest, and the rate of profit is usually the highest. The rate of discount is usually intermediate between the two. The demand for money is usually the most important factor, and the supply of money is usually the least important factor. The rate of interest on government securities is usually the most stable, and the rate of profit is usually the most volatile. The rate of discount is usually the most flexible, and the rate of interest on government securities is usually the least flexible. The demand for money is usually the most important factor, and the supply of money is usually the least important factor. The rate of interest on government securities is usually the most stable, and the rate of profit is usually the most volatile. The rate of discount is usually the most flexible, and the rate of interest on government securities is usually the least flexible.
