YPRES.

Through the long years, stone upon
Stone you rose,
Wet by men's tears; safe from the nation's foes.
By moat and wall, guarded, your people dwelt.
In churches tall, saintly your priesthood kneelt.
Graceful your trees, through the long centuries
Grew by degrees, fanned by the passing breeze,
Stately and tall, ease-giving shadows cast;
In winter's squall, bared by the icy blast;
Now, by the enemy razed to the ground.
Gone is security—ruin around;
Smashed the Cloth Hall, shattered by German shells,
Broken the wall—ghastly death lurking dwells, Fled are the people, and gone home they knew,
Broken church steeple, gone leafy avenue—
Cursed be they—authors of ruin red;
God will repay, blood of thy brave sons shed.
Come the day soon when may you rise
again,
Cease soon the fray, and then the sons of men
Build up thy walls, churches, and busy marts,
Houses and halls, peace dwelling in their hearts.
Flourish your trees—calm may your future be—
Through centuries, God watching over thee.

APRES LA GUERRE.

'Tis weary waiting, months and years,
While still the old, sad road leads on,
O'er moor and fen, and never nears
The rest our hearts are set upon.

That rest which will be Heav'n indeed—
When Spring returns to earth again,
And all the sons of men are freed
From war's long winter-time of pain.

When I return to my loved home,
'Neath sunny skies beyond compare,
And o'er the tussocks, freely roam
And breathe the perfumed hillside air.

E'en now I feel the bracing breath of Southern breeze o'er Ocean's swell:
Oh! may no haunting fear of death
My steadfast glow of hope dispel.
