

The Forest and Bird Protection Society will strive harder than ever against these obstacles as a united body for the realisation of its ideal. All the year round its national lessons are reaching more than 200,000 people, and the circle is widening. With very limited funds it is ensuring a very wide range of service for the public. It asks for more helpers, and believes it will not ask in vain.

UNFAIR WAR ON GAME BIRDS.

Deplorable plight of game-birds in U.S.A., as described in "Nature Magazine" :—

"We are faced with the fact that through over-shooting aided by baiting and other reprehensible practices our number of game-birds is seriously diminished, some species are fast approaching extinction. For some time we have urged a closed season on waterfowl and the outlawing for ever of such devices of killing as baiting, live decoys, and other unsportsmanlike methods."

That statement could apply as well to New Zealand as to U.S.A.

This beech forest in Southland (previously cut over) is regenerating strongly, because it is not infested by deer.
