

without knowing: "This is forever," and asking, "Have we the right?"

Awakened and enlightened man shall turn to his junk heaps, those excreta of civilisation, and by his chemistry convert them into the materials for articles of human use, or else into good clean earth again.

He will cleanse his streams and see them sparkling in the sunshine, again fit for man and fish to disport in. Even the self-cleansing ocean will not be a dump—he will love it too much so to insult it. The beach, where life began and to-day returns in the final flower of cosmic consciousness, to contemplate the beauty of the universe, will gleam white in the sunshine of a redeemed earth. This same sunshine, touching the trunks of the trees rising behind, turns to gold the columns of what was man's first and will be his last temple—the Eternal Forest.
