This Bird Is In Danger

The black stilt, the world's rarest wading bird, has for its main habitat the South Island's Ahuriri River. Only about 50 birds survive. Irrigation interests want to take water out of the Ahuriri, leaving insufficient for the black stilt.

The Planning Tribunal, later this year, will decide whether irrigation interests will have their way. The Environmental Defence Society will argue the case for the black stilt.

EDS is a group of lawyers, scientists and conservationists who give their professional time free. They are supported only by a small but loyal membership. A long hearing and the preparation of expert evidence still costs a lot. Some donations have been received already from Forest and Bird branches — but more is required.

Conservation In New Zealand

A Citizen's Guide To The Law

This book has been compiled by a group of lawyers and conservationists. It is a guide book for anyone concerned about the environment and wishing to make use of the great powers that are already available to the ordinary citizen. It covers the planning process at the local level, water rights, anti-pollution procedures, and so on. We are given detailed guidance on how to make use of and enforce the many laws that apply to the environment, and how to gain access to official information.

This book puts into our hands the power of effective intervention. 196 pages, 13 chapters, bibliography, appendices and index. $19.95 (post free).
