A LIVING NEW ZEALAND FOREST

by Dr Robert Brockie

An illuminating new perspective on the bush and its inhabitants. This book will appeal to all who love the outdoors and natural history.

Our native forest, from canopy to forest floor, has been the subject of a landmark 25-year study by DSIR scientists. Now, for the first time, their discoveries are presented in plain language – the changes with the seasons; behaviour and breeding of birdlife, effects of possums, deer and goats upon the vegetation, and much more. The study, based in the Orongorongo range near Wellington, has led to many astonishing discoveries which apply throughout most of New Zealand.
