

The native silvereye is a self-introduced bird which arrived in New Zealand from Australia in large numbers during 1853. The birds descend from the Tasmanian subspecies, one of six, also known in Australia as white-eyes.

Silvereyes in the Garden

GEOFF MOON photographs the most common native bird in the garden. Story, GORDON ELL.