A FEW weeks ago a chef was interviewed from 2YA. One story he told was of an occasion, in a hotel without a refrigerator in Central Europe, when he set a jelly in the cellar and next day discovered in the mould a frog, cold but otherwise alive and quite happy.

PUSSY WILLOW By Mary C. Hall

Here is another poem from "Down the Pixie Path," the fairy story which was broadcast from all the YA stations a few months ago. This poem, too, has appeared in the "Sydney Morning Herald."

All the little pussy-willows
Wear the softest furry coats,
Wear a bunch of silver whiskers
Just above their baby throats.
They all live with Mother Willow
In the garden where I play,
But I never see them playing
Though I watch them every day.
In the silver light of morning,
Through the sleepy spring-time sun,
Mother Willow rocks her babies,
And I'm sure they think it fun.

But they only flick their whiskers,
And they never even peep.
All day long the woolly pussies
Curl up tightly, fast asleep.

So I chose a silver evening
That was soft and white with dew,
And I crept out of the window,
Which I knew I shouldn't do.
Right across the sleeping garden,
Where a tiny breeze was stirring,
Then I caught them, yes, I heard them,
All the pussy willows purring!
