2. 0 Genuine Strad Series: Joachim, the noted violinist who held, during the peak of his career, undisputed pre-eminence as a classicist and solo-performer

"Last week arrived here in Leipzig a delightful little twelve-year-old boy, who is such an able violinist that Ferdinand David can teach him nothing," wrote Mendelssohn in 1843. The "little boy" became an honoured veteran, Dr. Joseph Joachim, friend of Schumann and Brahms, founder of the Joachim String Quartet, and grand-uncle of two present-day violin virtuosos, Yelley D'Aranyi and Adila Fachiri (nee D'Aranyi).

3. 0 Dvorak's SYMPHONY No. 4 IN G MAJOR, played by Czech Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Vaclav Talich

After a highly successful visit to England in March, 1884, and another later in the year, Dvorak was assured of the esteem and affection of the English people. When he returned in 1890 he was naturally invited to conduct at a concert of the Philharmonic Society. For this occasion he had brought the score and parts of a new symphony, which was exceedingly well received. This was his "Symphony in G."

2.30 The Seven Symphonies of Sibelius. "No. 4 IN A MINOR," Op. 63, by Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic Orchestra

The composition of his seven symphonies has extended over Sibelius's musically mature life, the fourth coming about halfway, when the composer was forty-six. It is of a somewhat sombre texture compared with its neighbours, the third and fifth symphonies, which are serene, sunny, and genial. The fourth has, in consequence, been less performed than the others.
