 Boston Promenade Orchestra, "Pop Goes the Weasel" arr. Cailliet
 9.31 Enrico Caruso (tenor), "Your Eyes Have Told Me" O'Hara
 Caruso sang at the age of ten, when playing about the streets of Naples, as the birds sing, because he couldn't help it. Nobody ever thought much about his singing then except his mother. She used to stop her work to listen to him, and she was sure he would be great. No musicians, so far as he knew, were in the family before him, and his father positively disliked music of all kinds, so the mother's belief was laughed at, especially by the father, who never realised his son's true greatness. Caruso used to say: "By sending him money I try to prove my voice is something out of the ordinary."
