scale service is in operation for transmitting facsimiles of news pictures around the world, and it will speed up news enormously, of course."

"There has been talk of a new idea in trans-Atlantic telephone communication, too—at present telephone conversations across the Atlantic all have to be done by radio. Cable will only take telegraph work. But if a co-axial cable were laid with sealed automatic repeaters in it every 40 miles—devices to pick up the signal and amplify it and send it on again, just like the television ones I mentioned—it would make telephone communication a good deal easier. But I don't see that being done for a while."
