Builders of New Zealand

From such modest beginnings as the export of small quantities of timber, New Zealand trade has developed in little over 100 years to support more than one-and-a-half million people. Over 75 years ago the Government Life Insurance Department was established to meet the needs of an expanding population. From small beginnings this National Office in a keenly competitive field has grown steadily, earning a sound reputation and securing the complete confidence of the people to reach its present prosperous position—that of one of the world's leading Life Offices. You may with the utmost confidence insure with the...

TRADE IN THE EARLY DAYS

Loading timber at Hokitika 100 years ago. Kauri spars for the British Admiralty were the first New Zealand products to be exported; and the timber trade was our first important industry.
