 "Norma" Bellini
 Norma, High Priestess of the Druids, secretly loves and has two children by Pollione, a proconsul of the invading Romans. Because of her love for Pollione she persuades the Druids not to fight the Romans. Pollione, meanwhile, has become enamoured of Adalgisa, a young virgin priestess, and waits for her to return to Rome with him. Adalgisa confesses her love for Pollione to Norma, who reveals her own passion for him. They join in denouncing him. Because of Norma's suffering, Adalgisa pleads with Pollione to return to her. He refuses, and, instead, plans to abduct Adalgisa. Norma, learning this, sounds the call of war on the Romans. Norma gives him the choice of death or exile. He refuses both, and Norma, angered, calls the Druids, and tells them a virgin priestess has broken her vows, and must die by fire as a punishment. Pollione, thinking she means Adalgisa, begs her not to do it. But instead of condemning Adalgisa, Norma tells the Druids it is she herself who has transgressed. Pollione, realising the greatness of Norma, ascends the funeral pyre with her.
