

PROFESSOR C. A. F. KNIGHT
"So many people here have been infected" deviate along side-tracks. If it is education he is seeking, he often wins first prize, not because he is cleverer, but because he has greater ambition. If it is business that is his calling, he often gets ahead of a competitor, not by illegal methods, but by sheer concentration on his objective, his willingness to work long hours, his willingness to forgo all sport or other pastimes which might divert him from his purpose. And so the Gentile, not willing to give up what the Jew does not consider essential, gets left behind, and becomes jealous of the man who forges ahead. In the Middle Ages it was the Black Death which was the disease that swept over the masses of men. In our generation the Nazis let loose the disease germs of jealousy, and skilfully, oh how skilfully, they played on the weaknesses of human nature.

It is a tragedy to me living now in New Zealand to discover so many people here who have been infected by this Green Plague. Yes, Hitler prophesied well. He even prophesied better than he knew.

Under Russia's Wing

Twelve months after the cessation of hostilities in Germany I was able to visit the Russian Zone in Eastern Europe.

I went to Austria and Hungary, both of which countries had been dominated by the Nazi creed, knowing full well that I was going to enter a region where material and economic chaos ruled, where the pillaging of the country by two armies, and the resulting inflation, had left the people utterly impoverished. I found what I knew was there. But I found something else which has not been made known as it ought to the western world. I found a state of things that no newspaper has reported upon even since my visit to Hungary,
