This way . . . it's a long haul

THE New Zealand dairy farmer—like every other section of the community—depends upon the motor vehicle . . . to take his produce to the factory, to haul fertiliser, seed, tools and equipment. If cars and trucks were taken from the scene, you see here his predicament.

Now let your imagination go further . . . in this motorless land how long would it take to bring fresh foods to your table? How would our vital exports to Britain be maintained?

Motor transport is deeply interwoven with our way of living. It has made a considerable contribution to our development and prosperity. It is the nation's lifeblood, the ways and means of efficiency. And Ford, in providing no less than a fourth of the cars and trucks in this country and backing them with unsurpassed service facilities, has played a leading role.

A DRIVING FORCE IN OUR NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

In the 1946-47 season New Zealand dairy farms produced 890,000,000 gallons of milk, yielding 408,000,000 lbs. of butterfat. Typical of rural areas is the scene at left—Ford Light Delivery Trucks unloading part of this produce at a dairy factory.
