Leo Delibes wrote "The Spring" (La Source) Ballet Suite in 1866, in collaboration with a Polish musician named Mirkous. Delibes had just been appointed to a post on the staff of the Paris Opera House, and this work, despite his comparative youth of 30 years, put him at once in the front rank of stage music composers. Two of his ballets perhaps better known than "La Source" are "Coppelia" and "Sylvia."

No minute passes without there comes a thrill to someone. It may be world news or some personal touch of joy or sorrow; a thrill begot of pomp and ceremony or a whispered word. Again, it may be an epic of heroism performed in the world's arena, or it may be that sublime heroism that is the outcome of faith.
