- In 1928 when Alfred O'Shea, the Irish-Australian tenor, visited New Zealand, the beauty of his voice in Irish ballads made him a popular artist. He was with the Melba-Williamson Opera Company in 1924, but during the last few years he has become lost sight of. The New York "Musical Courier" once gave Mr. O'Shea a good hint, but history has not revealed whether he took it. The paper said "Alfred O'Shea, tenor, is a singer who could be on top, but he must remember that happy-go-lucky methods may be well enough for informal music, but out of place in a recital where rigid technical control is essential."
