Prince Igor is about to start out on a campaign against the Polovetzky Tribe. He entrusts the care of his wife and the reins of government to his dissolute brother, Prince Galitsky, who secretly desires to usurp the throne. After Prince Igor's departure, Prince Galitsky encourages the population of Poutivle to indulge in drunken orgies. At the height of the festivities, word is brought that Prince Igor and his son Vladimir, have been taken captive in battle, and that the Polovetzky are about to attack the town. Meanwhile, in the camp of the Polovetzky, Vladimir, much to Prince Igor's sorrow, has fallen in love with the Polovetzky chief's daughter Konchakovna. Later, the victorious Polovetzky army return from sacking Poutivle, and celebrate the occasion by feasting and dancing. Prince Igor makes a desperate attempt, and manages to escape, leaving Vladimir behind, and returns safely to the arms of his wife, amid the great rejoicing of his subjects. This radio presentation features the great Russian basso, Feodor Chaliapin.
