is neither a nationalist nor a modernist in the special sense of the terms. Rather is he a follower of the German classical school of Brahms, whose influence is plainly discernible in his early chamber music. All his music is given real vitality by its notable qualities of lyricism, strength, and humour. Listeners will detect the last quality especially in the present Variations. The song which he has chosen as the basis of his Variations is a little old French tune, "Ah Vous Dirai-je, Maman," strongly reminiscent of "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star."
