The Queen's Hall Orchestra, "Overture in G Minor" Bruckner
- 8.39 Conchita Supervia (soprano), "La Maja dolorosa" Granados
- "Las Currutacas Modestas" Callejeo Granados
- When Conchita Supervia died three years ago at the tragically early age of 38, she left a legacy to the world of music in a generous number of recordings of her glorious voice. As a coloratura contralto (but more frequently called a mezzo-soprano) with a range of exceptional compass, she was almost unique, this particular type of voice having become more and more unusual since the close of the 18th century.

- 9.27 "Music from the Theatre": The Opera "Prince Igor" Borodin

As Prince Igor is about to start out on a campaign against the Polovetzky Tribe, he entrusts the care of his wife and the reins of government to his dissolute brother, Prince Galitsky, who secretly desires to usurp the throne. After Prince Igor's departure Prince Galitsky encourages the population of Poutivie to indulge in drunken orgies. At the height of the festivities word is brought that Prince Igor and his son Vladimir have been taken captive in battle, and that the Polovetzky are about to attack the town. Meanwhile, in the camp of the Polovetzky, Vladimir, much to Prince Igor's sorrow, has fallen in love with the Polovetzky chief's daughter Koutchakovna.

- Later, the victorious Polovetzky army returns from sacking Poutivie, and celebrate the occasion by feasting and dancing. Prince Igor makes a desperate attempt, and manages to escape, leaving Vladimir behind, and returns safely to the arms of his wife, amid the great rejoicing of his subjects. This radio presentation features the great Russian basso, Feodor Chaliapin.
