English translation is by Miles Malleon. Tartuffe, acknowledged to be the arch-hypocrite of all drama, was described after the first performance in 1664 as "a demon clad in flesh and clothed as a man, deserving the fires of the stake that foretaste the fires of hell." In the play, Tartuffe insinuates himself into the household of Monsieur Orgon with the intention of bringing it to disaster, but in the end is himself unmasked and brought to ruin.
