Microphones in Parliament

THE reopening of Parliament next week will bring in the busiest phase of the year's broadcasting. It will therefore cause a few difficulties and frustrations. The use of an alternative transmitter for 2YC's programmes on three nights in the week must affect listening in some areas; and this adjustment, necessary and unavoidable, is never accepted without regret. Much greater, however, would be the dismay of listeners if Parliamentary broadcasts were discontinued. Some people say that they never listen to the House of Representatives: they want music instead, or talks of a kind that are not to be heard from the Hill. But 2YA has a large audience when the House is in session, perhaps the largest in the country, and certainly drawn from the widest area.

If the volume of listening were charted, it would show marked fluctuations. At the beginning, when political breezes bring a welcome change of interest, the audience must be large and faithful. It reaches maximum size on Budget night (when everybody waits hopefully for a happy ending), rises and falls during the next week or two, and dwindles while the long debate is dying. Interest depends thereafter on what is in the Order Paper. Some sittings are bound to be dull; but the habitual listener has discovered that even on the quietest day a Point of Order can be raised with lively results. He may also have noticed that for some unexplained reason, perhaps psychological, the sharpest clashes seem to occur on Friday afternoons. And in Election year, when Members are more than usually aware of the listening public, the debates can seldom fail to be strenuous.

It is sometimes said that broadcasts give a false impression of what happens in Parliament. Admittedly, people who have witnessed the proceedings will be better able than others to understand them from a distance. There are, however, aids to listening which can bring the debates into perspective. Best of these, of course, is the experience and knowledge of politics that should be shared to some extent by all adults in a democracy. Yet Parliament has procedures, rooted in history, which are not always understood, even by men and women who are active in public affairs. There may be people who, after listening to the broadcasts, are not certain about Imprest Supply Bills, or the stages through which legislation is taken to the Statute Book. These matters are explained concisely in a booklet* prepared by Mr. H. N. Dollimore, Clerk of the House of Representatives. It gives a brief history of New Zealand's Parliament, describes its structure, powers, functions and procedures, and the rules and order of debate. A final section, suitably illustrated, describes Parliament House.

Armed with this valuable booklet, a listener may still be aware of gaps in his knowledge; but he will be closer than he used to be to the meanings of the broadcasts. He may also be encouraged to take his inquiries a little further. An educated community cannot know too much about the processes of government. Legislation touches all our lives, and the debates come sooner or later to every aspect of the nation's welfare. Most listeners find that, as the session goes on, they have to look carefully at the programmes before they decide to ignore 2YA. Later it is easy to be surfeited with politics; but in a year which ends with a General Election the broadcasts may draw us more often, and detain us longer, while the debate continues.

WITHOUT DOGMA

Sir,—James K. Baxter in his review of The Quaker Approach to Contemporary Problems criticises the "absence of any creed to which the individual Quaker is required to subscribe" as "the root of much confused thinking." I wonder if indeed the Quakers are any more subject to confused thinking than other Christian groups who do possess a defined theology. Can confused thinking lead to such remarkable unity of action as the Quakers show?

The essence of Quaker belief is an inner light both rational and mystic that leads men from different starting points towards the one still centre of unity in God. All religion stems from someone's direct personal experience of God—your own, that of the authors of Scripture, or of the saints who make up the Church. The Quaker position rests upon the directly personal, not the second-hand experience. And an experience of God cannot be described in ordinary prose. Like its nearest human passion, falling in love, it calls for symbolism, hyperbole, flights of imaginative comparison, a describing of the indescribable—poetry.

The man who sets out to write a psychological analysis of his beloved is probably no longer in love. A group of theologians attempting to describe the nature of God (surely the height of human impossibility!), or to produce any joint statement of what they know about Him, are bound to be trite, or meaningless, incomprehensible, or compromisingly dishonest, if not all four. God is all things to all men, and knowledge of Him does not stay put.

How many people nowadays, for instance, really believe with complete intellectual assent in what the compilers of the creed meant by "the resurrection of the body" or the descent "into Hell," or even "the communion of saints"? By an intellectual assent I do not mean that abnegation of intellect that mistakenly passes for faith, but something that can be more truly described as loving God with all one's mind. A church that requires assent to any joint credal statement about God cannot be truly Catholic, for it must either split into sections or involve its thinking members in some inner dis-integrity. Better the honest if decently-unexpressed doubt, than the dishonestly-expressed affirmation.

The strength of the Quakers lies in a unity of Spirit that defies verbal analysis. The fruit of the Spirit never has been correct orthodox theology, but love, joy, peace, the doing of the Will of God. JEAN IRVINE (Rawene).

BEARDS

Sir,—As one who has sported a beard for well over 30 years, I was naturally both interested and amused by your witty editorial on "The Beards of Monticello" (Listener, May 28). Very true is your maxim, that "to grow a beard, in a more or less clean-shaven age, is an enterprise to be undertaken carefully." You might have added that it is also one requiring forethought and not a little courage, for the wearer of a beard in this 20th Century must be prepared to face insult and, if necessary, to enforce respect for his hirsute adornment by heroic measures.

I have good cause to remember one occasion, many years ago, when I put these precepts into practice by punching the nose of a semi-drunken lout who had made unseemly reference to the subject of "whiskers," and voiced his intention of pulling them there and then. Instinctively I adopted the soldier's slogan that attack is the better form of defence, and although I was never a boxer—my hands being more adaptable to the keyboard than to the gloves—I succeeded in knocking this fellow off the back of the tram on which the incident occurred, much to the astonishment of my fellow-passengers, while I affected an air of nonchalance, as implying that such deeds were trifling and unimportant.

My secret elation, however, was quickly extinguished when a hospital X-ray examination disclosed compound fracture of the right hand—a dismal dilemma for a professional pianist, and one from which I have never completely recovered. But at least I had the keen satisfaction of having vindicated my outward "show of masculinity," perhaps guided subconsciously by Shakespeare's dictum:

He that hath a beard is more than a youth;
And he that hath none is less than a man.

L. D. AUSTIN (Wellington).

FLUORIDATION

Sir,—Dr. Turbott did not mention that at least five cities in the United States which undertook fluoridation of their water supplies have now abandoned the experiments, nor that the dental profession in that country is emphatically against artificial fluoridation. It is true that fluorine occurring naturally in water and in such foods as fish, tea and sunflower seeds appears to reduce the incidence of dental caries. But the fluorine being added to drinking water by local authorities in various parts of the world (in Havelock North and Hastings, too) is a by-product of the manufacture of aluminium.

Seldom has there been such a blatantly undemocratic move. "Purification" of our water supplies is a completely different matter. Purification and fluoridation cannot be compared. Our dental clinics advocate a diet which, if faithfully carried out, will keep our children's teeth sound. This is especially true if the mother has observed a similar diet for at least a year before becoming pregnant, since the foundations of good dental health are laid in the first three months of pregnancy. The fact that New Zealanders' teeth are so poor is directly related to a lack of will-power in saying "No" to all the sweets, white sugar, white flour goods and similar rubbish which comprises 90 per cent of the average diet. MARY I. STROOBANT
Auckland.

(Abridged.—Ed.)

Sir,—When Dr. H. B. Turbott declared that "the law allows a local authority to treat a water supply . . . for the advancement of the people's health," he presumably was referring to the section of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1933, which provides, "The Council may do all things necessary from time to time for the preservation of the public health and convenience."

To the average person, "necessary from time to time" means "occasional measures demanded by circumstances which may arise," and was never intended to authorise the long-term use of the water supply as a vehicle for administering medicine for this or that specific disease. To dose the whole of the people, without their consent, with a drug intended for only the children's teeth is a clumsy and high-handed procedure. The Department of Health will need to devise some selective and optional method, such as the issue of monthly supplies of fluoride tablets to parents. It can be done.

ADIT (Havelock North).

Sir,—Your correspondent W. H. Thomas tells us that sodium fluoride is a poison. Many medicines and antidotes are poisons. Now because it is necessary to prescribe a certain drug for one section of a community who are suffering from a certain complaint, should it be universally prescribed? Are all the adults who have artificial teeth to be compelled to take sodium fluoride because it will help to save the children's teeth from decay?

Medical doctors consider that fluoride hardens the teeth and thus renders them less liable to decay. If it is sufficiently powerful to harden teeth it must have an injurious effect on the more delicate organs of the body. When parents allow their children to indulge in an excess of sweets and soft drinks as to make a visit to the dental clinic necessary, then surely is the time for the doctor to prescribe a daily dose of fluoride for such children. A young person is far more able, through exercise, to counteract the ill effects of the drug on other organs than is an elderly person.

It's a nice state of affairs in a democratic country to have a poison forced down one's throat.

WATER-DRINKER (Wellington).

POETRY IN NEW ZEALAND

Sir,—It had been my intention to keep out of the current strife between poets, critics and public which is becoming an annual feature of your columns following a Poetry Yearbook review. Both sides have gone close to the slanging-match type of argument and I fail to see where either Mr. Reid's attitude to sex or his Catholicity are called to account. What should be examined is the justice, or lack of it, in the review—neither of which can be determined by reference to the above matters.

I agree with certain of the critic's judgments on this annual report on the state of our poetry—or verse. But I find certain of his methods of arriving there, harmful. The underlining or removing of mere words from their context in the manner of Mr. Reid surely rates among the most anti-poetic types of criticism attempted in this country—a collection of abstract facts, in the manner of the Kinsey Report—with little real use made of those facts. This is the worst possible kind of academic study, for it leads to mere annotation without accepting spiritual and instinctive guidance which arises from a more relaxed reading. With poetry, the reader must surrender something.

This is most evident in the case of the critic's analysis of Hervey's poems. It should be evident that these poems move together; are on a related theme, and perhaps are part of a sequence. In which case, certain key-words are bound to recur. The vivisection of the poems has left none of this evident. The suggestion that Mr. Hervey was indulging in the same playing with erotic symbolism as other poets is most unfair.

The result can only be seen as too hasty an assessment, arising, no doubt, from the fact that Mr. Reid the critic is more prolific, and achieves print more easily than our poets. In the period in which he was reading this book for review, he chaired the ZB review session, appeared on it as critic, wrote the review sections for two weeklies and a monthly, and has printed other reviews in other publications. All this as well as lecturing! Mr. Reid is something of a professional critic, much too busy to be capable of the surrender of which I spoke. LOUIS JOHNSON
(Wellington).

REPETITION OF TALKS

Sir,—May I venture a slight difference with your radio critic "Loquax" about the return of talks from 4YA in either morning or evening sessions? Several of my listening friends and I agree that a repetition of talks is a good thing, especially if the repeats are close to the originals. The subject is fresh in our minds. We cannot always follow the whole series at one time of the day, and are delighted to notice that we can complete our listening through rebroadcasts in a morning session. With Olga Sansom's delightful Stewart Island series I got two in the Saturday morning sessions from 4YA, one in an evening, and this morning have been pleased to pick up the first one (hitherto missed) from Invercargill. Friends who are working during the day enjoyed Margot Ross in the evening, at an hour when as a busy mother, I couldn't listen quietly. Then I was pleased to get her in a women's morning session soon after I had been told of the talks, when I had a quiet kitchen in which to listen. From my point of view, I really welcome these repetitions.

G. L. SUTHERLAND (Clinton).

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

I.H. (Whangarei).—That programme is not included in the BBC Transcription Service.

Just Another Dalbeattie-ite (Hamilton).—Many thanks.

Ros Fan (Wellington).—Edmundo Ros is the son of Anglo-Venezuelan parents, and is a naturalised British subject.

Verity (Dunedin).—Cannot print letters which have appeared elsewhere.

P.P. (Wellington).—Sorry; too long.

Harding Brown (Sumner).—(1) Recruitment of the Armed Services is a necessary object of official policy, and radio as well as press and poster publicity legitimately serves it. (2) Not unfair to other Departments of State in any way; they buy time when they need it and are given publicity without charge as the occasion requires.

D. Osborne (Hastings).—Professor Oliphant's recorded address was broadcast from 2YC later in the week of its delivery. It will be broadcast from 3YC and 4YC at 9.30 p.m. on Monday, June 28.

R. L. Harris (Levin).—Because these variety shows run in series, and series run out. Another later, as soon as it's available.

Plain Housewife (Wanganui).—All the English ones possible; American, unavailable; the Australian ones come from several different production studios. Unlucky coincidences, seemingly. If they recur, please give instances.

C.D. (Manurewa).—Sorry; it is often difficult to fit them in.

PARLIAMENT ON THE AIR

J. H. ENSOR, who appears on the cover of this issue, is one of the four broadcasting officers who will sit in the broadcasting booth at the House of Representatives during the coming session of Parliament, which begins at 2.30 p.m. on Tuesday, June 22. When Parliament is on the air the Parliamentary broadcasting officer has the task of balancing the microphones as different members stand up to speak, so that their words come through "loud and clear" to listeners. He is seated before a control panel equipped with switches and knobs controlling the 19 microphones in the House. He also announces the names of Members as they begin to speak, and is assisted in this by a list of the probable speakers of the day which is supplied to him beforehand by the Parliamentary whips.

SEVEN years ago a small group of enthusiasts in Auckland set about forming a Junior Symphony Orchestra. The idea and inspiration came from Gordon Cole, a school music specialist who was concerned about the lack of opportunity for young orchestral players to continue with their playing after they left secondary school. The scheme to form a permanent youth orchestra was taken up with great vigour by musicians in Auckland, and received wide public support. As a result, an orchestra of 70 players was formed in the following year, with every instrument represented from the piccolo to the string bass. The average age of the players was between 17 and 18, and within a year and a half of its formation, the Auckland Junior Symphony Orchestra gave its first annual concert in the Auckland Town Hall.

Recordings were made last year by the NZBS at the Orchestra's fourth annual concert, and these will be broadcast in coming weeks from the YC stations. There are two programmes, and they will be heard first from 1YC, starting at 7.0 p.m. on Monday, June 21. The programmes are introduced by Dr. Charles Nalden, the conductor of the Orchestra, who speaks briefly about the history of the scheme to form it, and the aims of the men and women who made it a reality.

"Very few of our members are full-time music students," Dr. Nalden says, "but some do become fully fascinated with the idea, and endeavour to turn their experience with us to more serious account." Three former members were accepted by the National Orchestra, he says. A further four formed part of the orchestra attached to the Australian National Opera Company when it toured this country, and not a few have passed on to Auckland's senior orchestral group, the Auckland String Players.

Dr. Nalden mentions that he was offered the post of honorary conductor in 1951 after George Cole, the organiser and foundation conductor of the Orchestra, was obliged to resign through pressure of work. He pays tribute to the work of Mr. Cole, whose interest in a permanent youth orchestra started through his work as conductor of the Auckland Secondary Schools' Festival Orchestra.

The Auckland Junior Symphony Orchestra was formed into an incorporated society, and one of the aims of this society has been to encourage young soloists. In the first annual concert Ngaire Stead, now a member of the National Orchestra, played the solo part in Pergolesi's Oboe Concerto. The second concert had Keith Field as soloist in the Grieg Piano Concerto, and this led to two further performances for him — with the National Orchestra. In the third concert the young violinist Antonia Braidwood played the solo part in Vaughan Williams's The Lark Ascending.

The soloists to be heard in the broadcast programmes are Murray Musson, who plays the solo part in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto, K.622, and Donald Bowick, who plays the solo part in César Franck's Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra. Murray Musson will be heard in the first programme; he is a commercial artist by profession. Donald Bowick, who will be heard in the second programme, is a student at Auckland University College, where he was awarded the Auckland Centennial Music Festival Scholarship. He comes from Palmerston North.

The programmes are of a high standard, although, as Dr. Nalden points out in his introductory talk, it is possible to detect faults in the playing if you set out to look for them. He adds that "nobody is more acutely aware of our short-

After these programmes by the Auckland Junior Symphony Orchestra have been heard from 1YC, they will be broadcast during July and August from 2YC, 3YC and 4YC.

MUSIC FROM LONDON

AN interview with the new conductor of the National Orchestra, James Robertson, will be heard in the second programme by the New Zealand Music Society to be broadcast from a link of the YC stations at 9.0 p.m. on Tuesday, June 22. The programme is one of a series of six recorded for the NZBS in London by courtesy of the BBC, and the artists who are heard are New Zealand musicians working and studying in London. In this one Patricia Naismith (viola) and Mory Richards (piano) play "Legend," by Arnold Bax; Jean Anderson plays Chopin's Impromptu in F Sharp Major, Op. 36, and "Two Fantastic Dances" by Shostakovich; Leslie Andrews (tenor) sings Schubert's "Der Musensohn," "Serenade" from Bizet's "Fair Maid of Perth," and "Joe the Carrier Lad," by Collinson.

THE ATOMIC DILEMMA

IS there a solution to the atomic dilemma? This was the question discussed by a "Question Mark" panel heard from YA stations on May 31. Members of the panel were Professor M. L. E. Oliphant, Director of the Research School of Physical Sciences at the Australian National University; the Very Rev. C. W. Chandler, Dean of Hamilton; and E. V. Dumbleton, Editor of the "Auckland Star." The chairman was John Reid, Lecturer in English at Auckland University College. Below is a condensed transcript of the discussion. The full discussion is to be broadcast from the YZs.

REID: I wonder if we could begin by defining the dilemma.

Oliphant: The world faces a situation now which it has never had to face in the past. Not only have we before us weapons of mass destruction—we have to face a different kind of situation where the whole of the world is involved, whereas practically only soldiers were involved in the past.

Chandler: I rather feel the problem is fundamentally a problem of man, that man is incapable in his own strength to find a way out.

Dumbleton: Each nation feels that its survival is dependent on its being the strongest. That is the source of the atomic race, and the dilemma is whether this feeling can be overcome.

Oliphant: Self-preservation nowadays can never mean going to war.

Chandler: I think the first nation to be utterly disarmed would be impregnable.

Dumbleton: We would be foolish and unrealistic to underestimate the strength of national feeling.

Reid: Is there a practical solution?

Oliphant: I just don't believe the banning of atomic weapons offers any solution. The use or misuse of weapons of war is determined during an all-out war entirely by the strategy of the moment.

Chandler: The general consensus of public opinion, brought behind those who at least have power to move toward the banning of this weapon, is good. If we approach the banning of this weapon we are going one step nearer the ultimate banning of war completely.

Dumbleton: We talk about banning the weapon. Who is to ban it?

Oliphant: The general idea is that some solemn convention should be entered into by all nations whereby they agree not to use atomic weapons or similar weapons of mass destruction. But such solemn agreement, unless accompanied by some guarantees that the weapons will not be used, could never be accepted by any responsible government as giving safety to its people.

Reid: Surely the matter is complicated, too, by the fact that the United States argues that so long as it has a stockpile of atomic bombs that is a deterrent? Isn't that a relevant consideration, that you have the fear of war which leads men to concentrate on weapons of war?

Dumbleton: I think that is an illusion. Suppose that the United States has 50,000 atomic bombs and Russia has 10,000. The discrepancy is of no importance if either side can devastate the other with 500.

Chandler: Man has been trying to find practical solutions to all sorts of things for centuries. Nations have been trying to out-vie each other in the matter of armaments, and this balance of power has led us nowhere. What is called for is a tremendously revolutionary opinion to be taken up and captured by the world. Every age calls for its individual voice. Somebody has almost got to die for the people today. This is fundamentally a moral and spiritual problem.

Oliphant: This is exactly the situation that the world has faced for the last 2000 or more years. Great religions all teach morality in its widest sense, but not one of them has yet prevented war. Indeed, leaders of religions always find some reason for giving war their blessing. I just cannot feel that we can appeal to things that have failed in the past to find solutions to our problems. Morality and ethics, the teachings of religion, are perhaps basic to any solution. But there is an old saying, God helps those who help themselves, and unless man makes the effort he is not going to find the solution elsewhere.

Reid: We are asked to find some kind of solution. Is there any practical method the nations of the world could engage in order to reach at least some interim solution?

Oliphant: If some way could be found for asking the people of the world what they would agree to in order to find a solution I believe that they would unreservedly and overwhelmingly vote for some form of central world government with powers which are limited to the prevention of war and to the promotion of international understanding, but above all things possessing the only armies, the only organs of police for the preservation of law and order. We adopt that solution to the problem of crime.

Dumbleton: That is an ideal solution, but I don't think it is practical. When you set up an international authority with limited powers in fact you have made it the strongest power in the world. Then if the controllers are corrupted by power we would have no idea of the consequences.

Chandler: Wherever the power may be you have the personal element still there. Ultimately, I think it lies in the people's hands. When the people can unilaterally be brought to say "No" perhaps something will happen from the top.

Oliphant: These things are very often determined by emotion rather than reason. I agree that it is wrong to prostitute science. On the other hand, if my own country were involved in war, whether it were right or wrong, I would take the old-fashioned attitude that her preservation was greater than I was. That is a very natural reaction that we have got to take into account. We have got, therefore, to try and build up in the limited sphere of the prevention of war that same loyalty to the world as a whole men now feel towards their own nation.

Dumbleton: Between the wars earnest endeavours to bring about disarmament broke down because they came up against the mistrusts of nations. What practical reason is there for believing the rulers of Soviet Russia or of the United States would yield up their sovereignty in a matter of this kind to a joint body which would have power over the survival of each nation in the future?

Chandler: The development of the hydrogen bomb may be the means of a tremendous revival. Common man's opinion is being marshalled. There are indications among the religions of Christendom that they feel they have got to find a solution. Everything that Oliphant has said regarding the churches' failure in the past is substantially true. We have come to terms far too readily with the State. But I do think that in this dilemma today it is either down and out or must spell a complete revival.

Reid: Is the real problem the problem of making the voice of the people articulate and real?

Oliphant: Countries used to the expression of democratic feeling could express these feelings democratically. But why not accept the fact that for the moment the peoples of Russia or of China have to speak through a government which is dictatorial in many ways. That should not prevent us from negotiating with them. In time I think the thing would straighten itself out. Ideologies are insignificant in comparison with the survival of man.

Dumbleton: The assumption that the peoples of the world are against the use of atomic weapons I think is correct, as it is correct to say that people are against sin. How much are they against sin, against atomic weapons? If you put in the power of an international body, the power of life and death you give them every other power. One of the fundamental causes of friction and strain is the maldistribution of wealth, particularly in Asia—scores of millions undernourished and, by contrast, Australia and New Zealand exceedingly fortunate in every respect. Supposing your world authority decides that to ease this pressure it is expedient, right and Christian to move 50,000,000 Chinese or Japanese into Australia and 10,000,000 into New Zealand. Would we agree if we could by agreeing relieve ourselves of the fear of the atomic bomb?

Oliphant: I think we would if the alternative was extermination.

Dumbleton: I don't think that if a referendum were taken there would be no doubt whatever about the answer.

Reid: The point appears to be to what extent the present means of communicating and sifting out such things have been successful. In what way has the United Nations been deficient in this regard?

Oliphant: People haven't yet sat round a table and discussed dispassionately this whole problem. Yet I believe that in the United Nations there is the nucleus of a body which can fulfil these functions. If the United Nations could be given a real police force and the other nations agreed to hand over their authority in those matters to the United Nations I believe a solution would be found.

Chandler: I speak really as a Christian absolutist. I believe neither the United Nations or any other body of men will ultimately achieve the end we desire unless there is a tremendous weight of public opinion behind them. If only the Church could be galvanised into definite action and courageous outspokenness much good would come.

Dumbleton: I don't want to appear out of sympathy with Oliphant or Chandler. I am in almost complete sympathy with all they have said or with their motives. But harm is done by oversimplifying the problem. I cannot, in the light of what has happened before, think that a practical solution has yet been offered. Hope lies in a relaxation of international tension. The hydrogen bomb particularly has done one thing. It will make governments more cautious.

Reid: I think the members of the panel have agreed that this is an international problem of tremendous magnitude, and that the conscience of the average man needs to be stimulated and kept alerted as to the great crisis that faces him and all his fellow human beings.

PROFESSOR OLIPHANT

VACANT POSSESSION

"SURELY we are entitled to possession," sighed Mamie, her almost transparent hands impatiently pleating and unpleating the dark stuff of her skirt. "I realise, sister, that it is many years since we actually lived there, but our continued absence, through no fault of our own, cannot alter the fact that it is Our Home."

"You were born there," said Agatha gently. Her hands moved like white moths above her knitting. In the half-light it was impossible to see her face. In fact the house was built for you, Your dear mother was far from strong, and the doctor thought the sea air might prove beneficial. I remember John, the coachman, used to drive father and me in the trap every Saturday to view the progress of the work. Father persuaded the carpenters to work sixty hours a week so that it might be ready for your mother's confinement."

"And it was finished in time?"
"Yes, we moved there a month before you were born. Your dear Mama was so happy. She loved the sea. The chaise-longue was drawn right up to the window in the East Room so that she could watch it all day long. At first she seemed so much improved—"

"Yet she died."
"Yes, she died."
"In the East Room. I seem to remember."

— A Short Story by M.B.

"Nonsense, Mamie. You were far too small."

"Last time we passed that way," said Mamie, "there were children riding tricycles in that very room. After all it's our house. Why can't we get these lodgers out? I cannot see what prevents you from instructing Mr. Thrumble to take the necessary steps."

"My dear Mamie, I've tried so often to explain to you. I'm afraid you've been out of touch with these affairs for a long time, longer even than I. We would have to prove greater hardship. Our accommodation here is I suppose adequate—"

"I don't feel at home here even yet," interrupted Mamie, "and I have had a great deal more time to get used to it than you have. Now in our own home—"

"And I don't think we could get possession on the ground that they are undesirable tenants. Mr. Thrumble informs me that they pay very regularly—"

"As if money meant anything to us," scoffed Mamie, "placed as we are!"

"Then there are the children," continued Agatha imperturbably. "It is almost impossible to be granted possession of a house where there are children."

"Well," said Mamie briskly, "I have quite set my heart on returning. If we cannot get possession by legal means we shall have to devise something a little—unofficial."

"Have a care, Mamie. If you had a fault it was that as a child you were given to impulsive action."

"Dear Agatha. If you had a fault it was that you inclined to over-cautiousness."

"What had you in mind, child?"

Mamie rose to her slender height and began to pace silently up and down.

"The Frobishers, sister. Remember the Frobishers. The Frobishers are now in undisputed possession of their old family home. In fact nobody else even covets it."

"How did they achieve this?"

A mischievous smile played round the corners of Mamie's colourless lips. "The Frobishers decided to give the occupiers the impression that the house was haunted. Oh, nothing blatant, you understand. Just a branch tapping on the window where there is no branch to tap, or the moonlight, casting strange shadows on a counterpane when someone lies sleepless. Little things, but enough to remind people that the house isn't really theirs, that they don't belong there."

Agatha thought for a moment. "You forget, my dear, that I said there were children."

"Oh, I wouldn't frighten the children! I assure you, Agatha, nothing was further from my thoughts."

"I didn't mean that. I merely meant that such schemes are harder to carry out where there are children. Parents—"

I cannot speak from experience but I am a keen observer—are almost completely inured to the unusual. In a house where there are children no adult is surprised if a branch taps on the window where there is no branch to tap, and if a strange shadow appears on the counterpane the adult goes to sleep again without bothering to notice that it is not cast by the usual child waiting admittance to his parents' bed. Strange noises at midnight and clocks striking thirteen are, of course, mere commonplace."

"One cannot even establish an atmosphere?"

"Children are fatal to atmosphere."

"You speak very definitely, sister."

"I speak from experience."

"You too tried a method such as I suggest?"

"Not precisely, child. I confess that when I first came here I found it very difficult to settle down. Like you, I was homesick for the old life, though possibly, being so much older, I have come sooner to resignation. At any rate I wanted desperately to see the house again. I thought that perhaps if I got in touch with Mrs. Hudson she might encourage me as a regular visitor. I chose my moment with great care—it was a Saturday afternoon, dark, with a cold southerly blowing from the sea. Mr. Hudson had gone to a football match—"

"It always amazes me," interrupted Mamie, "to hear people say that the present generation is decadent. I remember Saturday afternoons at home and Papa and George shut up in the study with their whisky and cigars and no conversation to be heard till John had driven over the hill with the racing results."

"Mr. Hudson, too, seems to be a sporting gentleman," said Agatha, "but, as is the present-day habit, takes his pleasure farther afield. Mrs. Hudson was quite alone in the house, the children having gone to a birthday party. She had lit the fire, but the lights were not yet on. I stayed in the room a long time, wondering whether the moment was propitious to speak to her. I think she sensed my presence, for she laid her book aside and remained staring into the fire. I put my hand gently on her shoulder. She shivered a little. Then the front door opened and the children burst in, waving paper hats and blowing those long whistles and one of them shouting to be taken to the bathroom. I felt decidedly out of my element."

"My poor Agatha! You hurried away?"

"No, Mamie, I stood my ground. It's not that I'm exactly frightened of children, it's just that I find them a little—well—uncanny. At any rate, having come so far, I wanted to have a good look at the house."

"Agatha, how brave you are! You take after the military side of the family. Tell me, was it greatly changed?"

"Sadly so, to me."

"Tell me, sister. Do not seek to spare my feelings."

Agatha laid down her knitting and dabbed at her hollow eyes with a cobweb of handkerchief.

"It's wrong, I realise, to set such store by the past when theologians assure us we have all our life ahead of us. But, Mamie, it seemed so sacrilegious. Papa's billiard-room is called the Rumpus Room and the children play ping-pong in it. And the west bedroom where you—where you—"

"Pray don't distress yourself, dear Agatha. It brings it all back to me."

"By the way, dear, did I ever tell you how brave you were? And so young—"

A Presbyterian Looks at Communist China

A PRESBYTERIAN missionary in the Far East for many years, the Rev. E. G. Jansen is not altogether a stranger to readers of The Listener. Eight years ago he described for us his experiences in war-torn China, and when we heard recently that he was back in New Zealand again we asked him to tell us something of what he had seen since he returned to his missionary work near Canton. Mr. Jansen's views on Communism in China are summed up in a talk to be heard from the YC stations at 9.30 p.m. on Friday, June 25, and when we asked about these he said he was one who began by believing about 15 years ago that Chinese Communism was different from the main block of Communism—something adapted to Chinese local conditions without the evils of totalitarianism. "I thought it was, in fact, a form of agrarian reform," he said, "and with that in mind I watched the growing strength of Communism with considerable interest, feeling that the radical reforms it sought to introduce would be a great advance on the ineffectual and corrupt Chiang Kai Shek regime. I was one of the Christian missionaries who hoped that a working agreement—a basis of co-operation—could be found between the programme of the Christian missions in China and this evangelical reforming party."

After living under Communism for a year and a half, said Mr. Jansen, such hopes had not only waned to vanishing point—it was obvious that the Communist Party's intention was to sweep out every trace of missionary activity; and far from joining forces with the indigenous Christian Church on some kind of joint enterprise of social service and uplift, its intention was to compel the Church to serve the ends of the party in a political sense. "From all this experience I came to realise that Communism at the stage when it is a minority bidding for popular following is an entirely different thing from Communism in undisputed control. Then it throws off the sheepskin cloak of pleasant promises and reveals itself as the wolf it really is."

REV. E. G. JANSEN
Hope waned to vanishing point

When we asked Mr. Jansen if he had had difficulty in getting out of China he said that people leaving the country had to secure exit permits carefully stamped and sealed by the proper government department. "In our case," he said, "it meant a visit to the county seat 60 miles away. We thought the visit would occupy one day, but we found ourselves detained there and living in a hotel for 21 days, and even then the permits were not issued. We were allowed to return home, and a week later were taken back to the county seat under police escort. We were told that the escort was for our own protection, lest the populace, recognising us as objectionable Western imperialists, should become violent. Actually Chinese who recognised us here and there gave us nods and surreptitious waves. At the county seat we had to undergo a long examination on the details of our past life, all of which was noted. After this the exit permits were issued. With one delay and another it took us altogether four months to get away."

What was the fate of the Chinese Christian Church? we asked Mr. Jansen.

Contrary to what most people in New Zealand expect to hear, he said, there was no direct persecution of the Church. Church services were being held as in the past, and no one was ever arrested and charged with being a Christian. "The Communist authorities, in fact, make much of the freedom of religious clauses which they have included in their constitution," Mr. Jansen continued. "Freedom of religion, however, is more nominal than real. Great pressure is put upon the Christian Church to make it conform to a pattern of activity mapped out for it by the authorities. The aim is not to exterminate the Church but to change its character from within and make it a tool of the party to serve the ends of the State."

Mr. Jansen said that all kinds of pressure were put upon the Church to bring about that end. Ministers had to undergo courses of re-education, and those who showed themselves resistant to the new thought were given intensive "brainwashing." Sermons had to be submitted for approval to a public affairs bureau before they were preached. Those who conform were led progressively into the service of the party, and their work as Christian Ministers became less and less distinctively Christian and more and more political. The objection to missionaries like himself, Mr. Jansen added, was that they were Westerners and a strengthening element in the Church.

Since leaving Communist territory in 1951, Mr. Jansen has been on the staff of a lay training centre established by the Chinese Church in Hong Kong, and he will be returning there with his wife in July next year. Before then, following refresher studies at Geneva, he will be visiting lay training institutions in Europe and on the Continent.

More than a million people had entered Hong Kong in the last four years as a result of the political upheaval in China, said Mr. Jansen. This had created many problems for the government of the colony—for instance, in housing, transport, water supply and education. "The Government of Hong Kong is from the Colonial Department in London, but in recent years there has been a strong movement towards local representation," Mr. Jansen said. "As a result the powers of the urban council, which in the past has been advisory more than legislative, have been enlarged. This trend is likely to go on modifying progressively the forms of government in the colony. It reflects the need for some sort of self-expression and a voice in government." Another interesting development of the last two or three years was the establishment of a Chinese University, Mr. Jansen added. Among other things this gave opportunities to young intellectuals among the refugees from Communist China who, though of equal standing in other respects, lacked the command of English necessary for study at Hong Kong University.

we've been used to. In fact" (she lowered her voice) "she wears Trousers!"

There was a shocked silence. "That dreadful Mrs. Bloomer!" said Mamie faintly. "Who would have thought that her influence would have reached such proportions?"

"So you see possession, in any personal sense, is quite out of the question." "Oh, dear," sighed Mamie. "It's just that, denied as we are all material resources, I do not see how we can restore the house to what it was in dear Papa's day without the assistance of the present occupiers."

"Frankly, dear child, I doubt if I shall ever feel at home there again. I should always be haunted by the patter of tiny feet." She shivered, as though someone had walked over her grave. "That is why I feel it might even be wiser to put sentiment aside and try for something with Vacant Possession. We are reasonably comfortable here in the meantime." She picked up her knitting and once more her hands fluttered silent as moths above its grey folds. "Perhaps one of our friends could look out for something."

"You are right as usual, sister," agreed Mamie, resting resigned hands in her insubstantial lap.

"I should like to find something really comfortable," mused Agatha. "After all, they say you're a long time dead."

the curate was deeply affected. He never married, you know."

"I'm glad," said Mamie gently. "But it was you, dear sister, whom I chiefly remember. So gentle, so selfless—I wish I could have done as much for you."

"Thank you, dear. Yes, the dear west room. I scarcely recognised it. Not a medicine bottle anywhere."

"But is not the wallpaper the same? I always found the water-lilies on the green ground so conducive to tranquillity of mind and body."

"They use it as a dining-room now. One wall is painted red and the rest turquoise. The ceiling is yellow."

"The vandals!" shrieked Mamie. "How could they? That Hudson woman, the vixen! I'll get possession of her! I'll make her change it back!"

"Hush, dear, hush, you must conserve your strength. I forbid you to think of such a thing. You would be most uncomfortable—"

"That's my funeral," said Mamie ungraciously.

"You know the stories they tell about two women sharing a kitchenette? Well, the other sort of sharing is even harder. You have to be really kindred spirits. And I'm afraid Mrs. Hudson, though possibly a gentlewoman, isn't quite what

Radio Review

THE WOMAN'S ANGLE

I FIND panel discussions in the Women's Sessions much livelier than those I hear in the evening. Of course, the women's panel has all the advantages. To begin with, we have a team of specialists talking to an audience of specialists, and this gives rise to the most delightful of discussions—shop. Then there's the Dorothy Dix angle, since the talk usually stems from a problem sent in by a worried listener; and the panel, if not quite in the same box as the writer, usually have friends that have been. The discussion, in fact, never has to resort to the academic. A typically good session was the recent treatment by the Auckland panel of two questions, one concerning teen-agers and drink, the other concerning the effect of divorce on children. I noticed that it was the man in the team who spoke from general premises, and the women from actual or near-at-hand experience. And what a difference one notices, morning or evening, towards the member of the minority sex! In the evening courtliness creeps in, but I'm pleased to be able to report that the morning's Mr. Somerville is treated like one of the girls.

North Country Accent

THE New Zealand artist may be caught in the familiar cultural dilemma, but the New Zealand consumer is in the happy position of getting his culture coming and going. Last week I heard a very enjoyable performance of Priestley's When We Are Married by an NZBS cast. A third-generation New Zealander, I am still sufficiently close to transplanting from British soil to feel a kinship with that North Country accent, and the richly comic situation is equally valid here or there. But there was food for thought in the fact that the locale of this New Zealand production was so convincing that it could equally well have come from BBC Regional. Granted the diffusive effect of radio is it too late, rather than too early, for us to produce a typically New Zealand culture? Or will our triumph come when we can hear a BBC production of a New Zealand play written for an Auckland accent?

—M.B.

Unfortunate Gourmets

ALTHOUGH I am still seeking for more new plays, The Man Who Ate the Popomack (1YC), which I had not heard before, made quite pleasant listening. I remember W. J. Turner as the witty Australian who wrote those entertaining stories about Henry Airbubble and the Duchess of Popocatapetl, and the haunting lines about the enchantment of "Chimborazo, Cotopaxi," and so I expected something out of the ordinary run of fantasy. I wasn't disappointed with most of this fable of the men who ate the exotic Popomack fruit, thereby acquiring its repulsive smell, which causes them to lose friends, and, in one case, a fiancée, despite such expedients as a diving-suit. William Austin, I thought, in particular, gave a nicely-judged performance as one unfortunate gourmet. But I always feel horribly cheated when "it all turns out to be a dream"; and wish that Mr. Turner could have devised a neater and more meaningful ending than this last refuge of flagging invention. Here is one case in which the NZBS might justly have called in its busy play-doctors. But, then, I believe that Mr. Turner is still alive, whereas Shakespeare has been decently dead these many years.

The Early Church

PROFESSOR E. M. BLAICKLOCK'S new series from 1YC, The World of the Early Church, is a logical sequel to his earlier talks on The World to Which Christ Came. Unlike most sequels, they have all the point and interest of the original. Dr. Blaicklock manages to weave the results of modern historical research into a picture which has life and vividness, without being in any way related to CinemaScope Christianity. I was especially struck by his most recent talk on "The Early Church and the Working Classes," in which he discussed the guild formations of Roman times and the particular social atmosphere in which the Church grew, and in a few crisp sentences examined the part of Nero in the burning of Rome. In the past the BBC has given more attention to this kind of broadcast than has the NZBS. But recent programmes, these talks included, seem to indicate a broader policy. They certainly reveal that we have no lack of able and interesting speakers to discuss religious topics.

For Men Also

"IT'S an ill wind that blows nobody good," I thought, as, confined to the house for a day, I settled back to listen to 3YA's Mainly for Women. The chief item of interest in this particular session was a discussion between Professor McCaskill and Mrs. Cridge on improvements which could be introduced in the country's consolidated schools. This discussion, compered by Arnold Wall, was worthy of fuller treatment. It brought to at least one listener knowledge of a hitherto neglected aspect of our national life. I did not know what a "consolidated" school was, that teachers also drove the school bus, or that intellectually handicapped children in the country do not have the same facilities as town children. The afternoon session brought me the life history of a Parka; Grace Adams's whimsical story of the adventures of a species of hood and cape subjected to the contempt of a deer stalker, and the even more destructive restorative measures of a certain young man whose own tent, treated with the same oils, nearly went up in spontaneous combustion.

No Further Forward

IN our day of research and analysis the most unlikely topics are subjected to scientific observation and comment. Such treatment may have quaint and amusing results. For example, certain portions of the Kinsey Report are in their own way as amusing as would be a solid archaeological report on the Paleolithic culture of the fairies of Great Britain. On the other hand, if the subject of the research is itself humour, as in Professor Joseph Jones's 3YC talks on Modern American Humorists, then it may be neither humorous, nor, at least in its lower flights, relevant. To be sure,

"I'll certainly be pleased when they start to broadcast Parliament—Father hasn't laughed since 'Take It From Here' stopped" the existence of humour throws a light upon man's estate, and his sense of the fitness of things, and it is the absence of the latter, plus their otherwise close resemblance to us, which makes us think that monkeys are funny. I have, however, found so far no time-shattering intuitions concerning man or even modern American man emerging from Professor Jones's talks. He has told me a little I did not know about the New Yorker, has touched on Perelman and, I think, mentioned Thurber; and all I am tempted to say, descending even lower than Dorothy Parker's "A Girl's best friend is her mutter," is that I am no Thurber forward than before.

Conflict of Choice

IF there is one thing the listener dislikes as much as no interesting programme, it is two of them at the same time, and a black Wednesday at the beginning of June provided this conflict maddeningly. Station 4YC has been giving us a good series of plays on Wednesdays; but on this night, Country Calendar, from 4YA was at the same time offering us a talk by Cotford Burdon. Mr. Burdon, as I have found in the past, can be quite as good as a play; but the play went on for two hours, and he for fifteen minutes, the first fifteen minutes of the play. So I remained tuned in to Country Calendar. After Mr. Burdon's wit, the play seemed turgid, a semi-poetic and sentimental treatment of François Villon, but I still concede that "a light-hearted treatment of the town versus country question," occupying its first fifteen minutes was not its best introduction. One wonders if such a conflict of choice is really necessary. I do not regret my decision: the picture of Mr. Burdon fleeing Christchurch as "Lot fled Sodom," the libations and incantations of the young men from the Department of Agriculture, and the inimitable Burdon treatment of many other facets of country life are not easily forgotten, nor do they lose their power to amuse. Other listeners may have chosen the play first, and thus missed one of the best talks of the year.

Lightness Lost

THE speed and the brevity with which a BBC panel trifled cheerfully with the notion "My Pet Hate" made an amusing programme which has most regrettably inspired a series of fifteen minute talks at present to be heard from 4YA. The BBC used a team of speakers, and in the interplay of comment some lightness was achieved: to bog a single speaker down in a prolonged dissertation on a subject essentially trifling (if treated in a determinedly "light-hearted" manner) seems to involve him in the busy manufacture of a set of unreal stereotyped figures to serve as foci for the hatred demanded of him. Perhaps the speakers so far heard are too good-tempered for the role in which they have been cast; it is more likely, however, that the idea behind these talks is too slight—like a Bikini on a fat woman, there just isn't enough to go round.

'Contemporary' or 'modern'?

There are two schools of thought. Some say 'modern': others 'contemporary'.

Well, we can leave those differences to architects, critics and the lexicographers. Our contribution to the discussion is a wide range of Sundour Fabrics—for example like the texture and the print shown here—and that seems to satisfy both schools of thought.

A Great Poetic Age

THE SHAKESPEAREAN MOMENT and its Place in the Poetry of the 17th Century, by Patric Cruttwell; Chatto and Windus, English price 18/-.

(Reviewed by James Bertram)

MR. CRUTTWELL'S theory (for it is a genuine theory, worked out in some detail) of what happened to English poetry in the 17th Century, is one of those academic studies that come pat after a good deal of pioneer work by others has cleared the ground. Grierson on Donne, Eliot on Marvell and the "dissociation of sensibility," Tillyard and Leavis on Milton, are some of the obvious critical stepping-stones to this reconstruction of a great age of English literature in terms of the supreme poetry it produced.

Briefly, the thesis is that from the closing years of Elizabeth's reign until the Civil War a moment of equipoise was reached in the transition from medieval to modern times: it was a moment, with all its tensions, peculiarly favourable to a various, inclusive and highly dramatic kind of poetry, typified in the maturity of Jacobean tragedy—"both vulgar and intellectual, traditional and modernist, religious in essence but secular in form." Our own age has shown a special interest in the poetry termed "metaphysical," but too often it has been studied in isolation, as though it were the outbreak of a rare and mysterious poetic disease. The great merit of Mr. Cruttwell's book—which is freshly written in a style that is almost too popular—is that it shows clearly what went before and what came after this moment of unified sensibility.

Beginning with a reading of Shakespeare's Sonnets that finds in them a number of clues to account for the change of manner in Hamlet and the later plays, Mr. Cruttwell examines the achievement of the "new-found methods" in Donne and Shakespeare: he discusses the growth of Puritanism and rationalism, the aftermath of the Civil War, and the new poetry of the Restoration—which in "Heroic Drama" returned to the mode of Tambrlaine, one of the simpler and cruder Elizabethan forms. A neat if not entirely watertight formula at the end is invoked to distinguish the "two great types of mind" of the 17th Century represented by Shakespeare and Milton. The whole treatment is much broader and richer than summary might suggest, and Mr. Cruttwell is at his best on figures marginal to his main thesis, such as Beaumont and Lord Herbert of Cherbury. This is a stimulating if sometimes irritating book, which no student of the period can afford to neglect.

GENETICS AND SOCIETY

THE FACTS OF LIFE, by C. O. Darlington; Allen and Unwin, English price 35/-.

THE first half of this important book is concerned with the history leading to the modern theories of genetics. It sets forth the necessary scientific background for what is to follow. The remainder is a study of man—man alone, and in society, and the relations of men and women. A theory of life, linked with recent discoveries in genetics, is expounded. This involves the author in a biological view of history. Out of the whole emerges a philosophy of determinism, largely based upon a denial of the plasticity of the individual person. For Darlington the adaptability of man depends on the variability of the species. The reader will find great store set on variation in determining selection; which leads, naturally, to an analysis of the mechanism of evolution. By corollary, the sterile heredity versus environment controversy is disposed of.

Those interested in education or the law may need to reconsider some of the theories on which their studies are built.

Individual plasticity is revealed as an illusion, as indeed it must be if genetic research is to be trusted. Yet current education theory, still somewhat under the influence of Freud, and opinions on the punishment (or reform) of criminals, assume the contrary. Similarly it follows that great differences in capacities or in social attitudes are determined by heredity. What one learns is not inherited, but the capacity to learn is. The effect is seen when the individual person is faced with a choice of environment. This disposes, at one blow, of Freud's vitalism, the pressures of over-ambitious parents, and those who talk of "free will."

Darlington's analysis of sex differences should be carefully considered. These are so great that the sexes, even in what appears a common environment, lead separate lives. This is not to condemn co-education. Each takes from, and gives to, the environment according to need and capacity. The author succinctly points out that all obstacles to relations between the sexes are encouragements to relations within the sexes.

The section on crime is the weakest part of the book, not because of any lack of interest, but because Darlington here accepts and uses methods which elsewhere he condemns. In other places, too, there is sometimes a little straining to fit awkward observed data into the neat deterministic framework. There are a few other minor faults. His passing reference to the Kinsey Report is not

HUNGRY MILLIONS

THE WAR ON WORLD POVERTY, by Harold Wilson, M.P.; Victor Gollancz, English price 14s. CITIZENS OF THE WORLD, by Stringfellow Barr; Victor Gollancz, English price 13s. 6d.

BOTH these books offer constructive arguments about world hunger, based on the fact that for the vast majority of mankind (two million New Zealanders among others excepted) the most urgent problem is not war, not Communism, not the cost of living, not taxation. It is hunger. Harold Wilson is that brilliant young Oxford economics don who resigned from the Labour Cabinet in 1951 with Aneurin Bevan. His book describes all post-war attempts to deal with the situation, and the handicaps and limitations to success, and leads to an argument for a World Development Authority which Britain and the Commonwealth should promote, with such support as can be secured elsewhere, but "if necessary alone." Mr. Barr, an American, takes his country and its Government to task for its obsession about the supposed need to integrate military with economic aid. He advocates an International Development Authority. Mr. Wilson's book has more facts, Mr. Barr's more argument.

NOT FOR BURNING

POEMS, an anthology edited by Alan R. Dunlop; published by the New Zealand Women Writers and Artists' Society.

THIS little book has about 40 poems, by 19 writers. Some are well known: Eileen Duggan and Ruth Gilbert are included. The chief function of such an anthology, however, is to give the young writer an opportunity to see work in print; and thereby to set new standards from fixed milestones. At a time when few journals publish verse of any kind, this is sufficient justification for such a book.

The work is naturally uneven. A lot of it is soft, and what isn't tends to be undisciplined. . . Women writing on war, I have noticed, are shrill snipers; not Big Berthas capable of the persuasive demolition of which I would approve. Similarly, in writing of love rejected, they seem to see man as the snake rather than as Satan; and therefore make us writhe without feeling guilt. Again, there is in their recollections of things

PRE-WAR DIPLOMACY

PRELUDE TO WORLD WAR II. by Gaetano Salvemini; Victor Gollancz, English price 30s.

THIS is a fine and heartening book—heartening because there can be published today a volume which has the moral indignation of the nineteen-thirties. Salvemini was driven into exile by the Fascist dictatorship in 1925 and returned to his Chair of History at Florence in 1949. In the intervening years, mainly at Harvard, he worked on this book—the story of the diplomacy that led to the last war. The biggest shock is the revelation of British foreign policy as carried out by Austen Chamberlain, Simon, Hoare, Baldwin, or—yes, Eden. By contrast, Neville Chamberlain shines with a dull lustre.

For the historian, political scientist, or person seriously interested in public affairs this is the best book written in English on the period. If there is any criticism it is that the author sees history too much in terms of the moral attitudes of the makers of policy, and not sufficiently in economic forces.

JOY IN OBSCURITY

THE WEAVING WILLOW. by John Marshall, with a foreword by John Arlott; Hodder and Stoughton, English price 7/6.

THIS is a cricket book with a difference. One or two eminent players walk into it, and many more are impersonated by youngsters in garden or street (I did this myself once), or are discussed round the bar, but primarily and almost entirely it is about very minor cricket, from domestic nursery to village green. We need reminding periodically, as John Arlott reminds us here, that only a handful of men play in the mind-racking tests, but thousands, or tens of thousands if we cast widely enough, toil obscurely on the grass and get a lot of fun out of it. John Arlott has known fine players who did not enjoy the game, but he says all bad cricketers do enjoy it.

Like much English humour, the book suffers from tepid over-dilution, and arch thrashing of situations. Though the detailed accounts of children's games awakened memories, I found them boring, and was happier when John Marshall grew up. The English seem to lose their heads easily over children. And it is astonishing that in this year of grace (or rather, Hutton) Mr. Marshall, editor of a London daily, should inflict on us a whole chapter on a Frenchman's impressions of the game, done in the traditional broken English of the stage.

However, there are some bright spots, including good stories, and "Gus's" drawings are the funniest I have ever seen on the subject, or perhaps for any game. Don't miss them. —A.M.

HORRID WARNING

THE SEVEN YEAR ITCH, a romantic comedy by George Axelrod; Heinemann, English price 8/6.

WHAT shall I say of The Seven Year Itch? I shall say this: that it is slick and nasty, and a deplorable bore. Who cares if Richard something's wife is away and he consoles himself with the chook upstairs? Who cares, if on reflection his wife still seems his sunshine, his only sunshine? Adultery is the classic comic theme, but let it for pity's sake have wit and style, or if this is not possible, let it be broad and lusty! The Seven Year Itch gives you titillation, and nothing more. This is always offensive by what it implies, not that men are often unfaithful to their wives, but that this primitive itching and tickling is proper behaviour for men and women. I regret to record that Mr. Axelrod has found it a profitable theme on both sides of the Atlantic. I issue here a horrid warning. If any of our societies produce it, it will confirm my worst suspicions.

Last Session of ZB Book Review

THE Commercial Division's popular ZB Book Review is closing down. R. M. Burdon, who chaired the first session in February, 1949, will deliver the valedictory at the end of the final broadcast on Sunday, June 27. The review will be replaced by a weekly series of hour-long dramatic programmes from the studios of the NZBS, the EBC and the Voice of America.

During its five years and four months on the air, ZB Book Review has featured 245 different speakers. Nearly 1500 books have been reviewed, wherever possible by specialists in each particular subject. For the first three years the session had a different chairman each week, but latterly each chairman has served for a month. The reviews were recorded in the various centres and forwarded to the studio in the chairman's home city, where each programme was finally put together.

In the last session on Sunday, June 27, the following books will be reviewed: Among the Americans, by Rom Landau (reviewer, Stuart Perry); I Left My Roots in China, by Bernard Llewellyn (James Bertram); English for Teachers, by Anton Vogt (John Reid); and Animals, Myths and Men, by Morus, otherwise Richard Lewisohn (Angus Ross). The chairman, of course, will be R. M. Burdon.

The end of ZB Book Review does not mean the end of broadcast book reviews. Book Shop, once a leisurely programme about books and topics connected with books, is now being broadcast weekly instead of fortnightly, and includes some four reviews a week instead of one every two weeks. It can be heard from the four YA stations and 3YZ at 8.20 p.m. on Wednesdays, 4YZ at 9.15 p.m. on Wednesdays, 1YZ at 5.0 p.m. on Sundays, and 2YZ at 6.0 p.m. on Sundays.

CHEESE IS VALUABLE

AS a boy I had holidays on the farm of pioneer grandparents, a farm that became theirs following participation in the Maori wars. My old grandfather drove a black horse, Te Kooti, so called in memory of that chieftain. I remember his lovely orchard with all sorts of fruits and small fruits. I remember my grandmother's shaded, cool milk room with the milk laid out in shallow pans. I watched the hand-skimming, the long hand-churning that produced the tasty farm butter and viewed the occasional production of a home cheese. This cheese-making was essential as it loomed large in the diet of the worker. The bread and cheese eating habit was brought from the old country. The modern wife lacks the culinary art of butter and cheese-making, and the modern New Zealand family has lost the cheese-eating habit of its forebears. Not having to make butter and cheese at home is all to the good; not having cheese in the daily diet is all to the bad.

Cheese is a good value food. It is chiefly the curd and fat of milk—one-third good body-building protein, one-third fat and one-third water. Beef, a much more popular food, is about two-thirds water. Both cheese and beef are good body builders, but cheese wins out economically. Beef is about one-fifth protein, cheese a third; beef is about a sixth fat against a third in cheese. Cheese is rich in lime or calcium, so needed for strong teeth and bones. Yes, cheese is worth cultivating, if you've never had the taste for it. It satisfies hunger and is good for working on. Why? Because it packs a lot of energy in very little bulk due to its fat content.

Most New Zealand households eat a lot of butter, and also use cream freely, deeming these very good foods. The truth is we eat too much of these. Cheese knocks spots out of them for value. A school class could prove it by keeping white mice or rats, feeding one lot wheat and milk, another on wheat and cheese, a third lot on wheat and butter, and a fourth lot on wheat and cream. The rats on wheat and milk will do best and wheat and cheese next best, those on wheat and butter or cream will not grow so well. You wouldn't dream of replacing milk in the diet with cheese. But cheese can be complementary. For example, if you drink a pint of milk in the day you get from it over three quarters of your calcium requirements. Then take an ounce lump of cheese and between the milk and cheese you'll have more lime than needed. This wouldn't be true of butter and cream. Housewives need to recast priorities in dairy products. Mothers with growing children particularly so. Let's put them in order of body building importance—milk, then cheese! We must be honest and leave out butter and cream. They don't body-build at all, but give us energy and vitamin A from their fat content. New Zealand homes have lost out by losing the taste for cheese:

It certainly wasn't our pioneering grandmothers who let this happen, but somewhere the rot started. The whisper went round that cheese was indigestible, mothers built up the idea and kept children off this good food. It is true that cooked cheese may be indigestible, but I fancy the fault is in overcooking. Be that as it may, raw cheese digests well, and can be taken by a child eighteen months old. And that's where we'll have to start again if we want New Zealand to eat more cheese—with little children. Start children off with a very little, preferably grated, in a sandwich, or over some fish or cooked or raw vegetable. Try to get the taste developed in the pre-school years, if you can. It's such a good cut-lunch standby if the liking is there.

New Zealanders eat too little cheese, only about a third of what they should. Our health would benefit with less butter and cream, and more cheese each day. Our forebears were cheese wise. This generation would be diet wise to become daily cheese-eaters.

Like a neglected bloom in her small bay-window:
No waves swept over her but ripples
Were the motions of her modest world.*

*Never had she been young, even her hat
Was ageless and time, repenting her ruined face,
Now passed her by and left her, rocklike.
Confronting whatever doom
With old-fashioned placidity.*

*She went under one shadow.
The iron god of duty.
And, because of his adorable exactions,
She trampled her corns with a martyr's relish.*

By this survival of a stiffer age.
But she conferred an inexplicable good
Like flowers that surprise a flinty place.*

Journey to Queensland

by "SUNDOWNER"

WE were not ten minutes on our journey when I saw Ransom. He was watching me as a horse watches you when you approach from behind, not turning round to look at you, but facing away as if he neither saw you nor cared. Only horses can't grin. Ransom was grinning broadly, and eloquently, telling me without saying a word that it was a huge joke to see me there and to be caught there himself.

Ransom is one of my test cases when I think about the value of education. When I first saw him 20 years ago he was asleep in his mother's arms. When I saw him last three months ago he was on his way to North Canterbury to break in a dozen young horses; and he seemed genuinely amused when I suggested that there were safer ways of earning a living. Now here he was with a mate of 23 on his way to Queensland to break in horses on out-back stations. There was good money in it, he said, and no special risk if you were neither brutal nor reckless. A horse was dangerous only when he was afraid of you. Knock him about and he will always be dangerous.

There were no special rules for overcoming his fear. The great thing was not to add to it. If you made him more nervous you were going the wrong way. If his confidence seemed to be growing you could be sure that your method was right.

"What about your own confidence?" I asked. "Isn't the secret of success knowing that you can ride him whatever he does when you mount?"

"I don't think so. It is certainly important to be able to stay in the saddle once you are there. But if you have handled him properly that will not be difficult. It is two years since a horse tried to buck me off, and he had been made half mad before I got him."

"Outlaws are not outlaws to begin with?"

"Not often. It can happen, I suppose. But the outlaws you see in the ring are made into outlaws deliberately. If a man comes along who can ride them to a standstill, he is not allowed to do it. If he did, there would soon be no money in them."

Well there must be a lot of horses in the world that no boy of 20 has ridden, but I accept Ransom's story so far as it goes. What interests me most however is the distance he has travelled in six or seven years. If he had gone to High

"A horse is dangerous only when he is afraid of you"

School and University he would now perhaps have been a Bachelor of Arts. But it is unlikely that he would have been able to tame an outlaw; I don't think he would have been able to shear a sheep in four minutes or shoe a horse in half an hour; he would not have trained and run dogs in trials; and I am sure he would not be in Queensland making more money in a week in a stock yard than I have usually been able to make in two weeks in a "profession."

[N a journey of a thousand miles north from Sydney I saw 20 sheep. They were three or four hundred yards away and could have been Romneys. They were certainly not Merinos. But as I write this note the auctioneers are selling 66,567 bales of greasy Merino in Brisbane which will probably bring growers seven million pounds. No one could travel from Invercargill to Kaitia without seeing 20,000 sheep if he slept half the time, but the sheep begin in Australia where the coastal belt ends.

It surprised me all the same to see cattle grazing over all that sheepless country, and horses at nearly every homestead. The cattle were not always fat or well grown, and the horses were usually the nondescript animals to be seen on small New Zealand farms 30 years ago—draughts, often hollow-backed and pot-bellied, half-draughts, and indifferently bred hacks. Often, too, there were pigs, red, white, mottled, or black, and where they were running free they seemed to be finding enough to eat. I will say nothing about the piggeries except that they reminded me painfully of eye-sores nearer home. In one of them, however, a saddle-back sow just about the time we were rushing past was giving birth to a family of 25—not a world's record, the newspapers say today, but equal to the record and established in spite of cyclones and floods.

Cattle, too, have been making news over here. A bullock which jumped out of the Brisbane show ring three years ago and injured a spectator has this week cost the show authorities £3000. A bull which charged a 16-ton tram in Melbourne yesterday put a horn through the control mechanism, and without injury to itself stopped the tram dead and considerably increased the blood pressure of most of the passengers.

I WAS pleased when I reached Brisbane to hear over the air that the Government of the Philippines had decided to import 1000 cattle a month from Queensland and New South Wales. But I was smiling on the wrong side of my face. The cattle are not to be used to improve Filipino cattle in milking sheds and grass lands, but to displace them on Filipino tables. They are to go out alive so that they will still be fresh meat when they arrive a fortnight later. But their destination is "the works."

The story is in fact a little worse than that. Instead of buying fat cattle the importers are asking for second-grade only, which means that these animals will be rounded up in the bush and begin their journey to the sea without any internal reserves and with a poor chance of building up on the way. They will be wild cattle, nervous and excitable, and not at all likely to settle down on board ship to hand-feeding and drinking. They will also, I gather, have to be certified as "pleuro-free" before they leave Australia, and will probably therefore be driven through crushes and subjected one by one to blood tests. By that time many of them will be half mad with fright, and by the time they reach Manila most of them will be half dead with hunger, weariness, thirst, and the violence of their uprooting.

I am not quite old enough to remember the cattle ships of last century. But I am old enough to remember what happened to thoroughly domesticated horses on the transports of the Boer War. In any case the Atlantic cattle ships are a tale that has been told too often to be questioned in 1954.

The Strange Case-History of Lord Randal

NEARLY everyone knows the ballad "Where Have You Been All the day, Billy Boy, Billy Boy?" or as it more correctly goes, "Where have you been all day, My boy Billy?" But how many know that it is basically the same song as the Scottish border ballad "Lord Randal"? The English poet Terence Tiller has written for radio production a fascinating and unusual account of the origins of this very old ballad, which involves feuding lairds of the Scottish border, the assassination of English kings, and the wanderings of medieval troubadours through Northern Italy and France. His script has been adapted for the NZBS by John Blennerhasset and produced in Wellington, and the programme, called The Ballad of Lord Randal, will be broadcast from the YC stations, starting from 1YC at 10.2 p.m. on Tuesday, June 22.

The history of the ballad is traced back in dramatic form through various versions as they appear in such collections as Sir Walter Scott's Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border and Countess Martinego-Cesaresco's The Study of Folk Songs. The many different verses, tunes, and settings show that it was an oral ballad that told of some old legend or historical event. Lord Randal becomes in one version Lord Ronald, and Scott thinks the ballad may have originally referred to the death of Thomas Randolph or Randal, Earl of Murray, nephew to Robert Bruce and Governor of Scotland, who died at Musselburgh in 1332, allegedly through poison administered by a friar at the instigation of Edward III.

The suggestion in another version, called Lord Donald, that the hero of the song was poisoned by a dish of fishes with "black backs and speckled bellies" links the ballad up with a story of the death of King John. The King was supposed, in one account, to have been murdered by a monk who gave him a drink prepared from the bodies of toads: "his belly began to swell for the troak that he drank, so that he died within 11 days, the morrow after Saint Luke's Day." Another version of the ballad, collected by Cecil Sharp in the journal of the Folk Song Society, mentions the hero as King Henry, linking the tale with the death of Henry I, who was supposed to have died from a dish of lampreys given to him after a hunting expedition.

So this fascinating story goes on, as one old legend after another seems to become associated with various versions of the song. Another nobleman mentioned is Ranulph or Randal, Earl of Chester in the reign of King John, whose son by his second wife was murdered by his divorced first wife Constance, the "stepmother" who appears in another version of the ballad, Wee Croodlin' Doo ("Where hae ye been a' the day, Willie Doo, Willie Doo?") There are many other variations on this astonishing story, and listeners should enjoy the gradual unravelling of the thread by the different commentators, and the singing of the many versions of the song, interspersed in the programme.

The Ballad of Lord Randal will be heard later from 2YC, 3YC and 4YC.

THE FLYING DUTCHMAN

WAGNER's opera The Flying Dutchman is based on the legendary story of an arrogant sea-captain who boasted that his skill would steer him around the Cape of Good Hope in spite of Heaven itself, and who was doomed because of this blasphemy to sail the seas forever. Nothing can free him from the curse but a true woman willing to give her own life for his salvation, and the devil permits him to go ashore once in seven years for the purpose of taking a wife on trial. A new LP recording of the opera by the Chorus and Orchestra of the Bavarian State Opera under Clemens Krauss, with Hans Hotter in the role of the Dutchman and Viorica Ursuleac as Senta, the woman he has been seeking, will be broadcast from all the YC stations at 7.0 p.m. on Sunday, June 27.

Wagner wrote the libretto and score at Meudon, near Paris, in 1841, and it was first produced two years later at the Royal Saxon Court Theatre in Dresden. It was the first of his "music dramas" in which he began to break away from many of the stilted conventions of opera. It shows his work in transition as he feels his way towards the essential principles of his new art form. Wagner said himself that the music of Senta's Ballad contained the thematic germs of the whole score, and he related the ideas of the ballad to the cheerful rollicking themes of the Norwegian sailors, one of which he actually heard on the journey from Riga to England which is supposed to have inspired him to write the opera.

The setting of the drama is the Norwegian coast in the 18th Century, where Daland, the captain of a Norwegian brig, sees the phantom ship of the Dutchman appear out of a storm. Daland offers to give him his daughter Senta as a wife in return for the treasure of "gold and pearls and precious stones" with which the Dutchman's ship is loaded. Senta falls in love with the Dutchman, who mistrusts her because of her relations with Erik, a huntsman. To prove her constancy, Senta jumps from a cliff into the sea. The Dutchman's ship, with all her crew, sinks immediately, and above the wreck the forms of Senta and the Dutchman, embracing each other, are seen rising from the sea and float upwards into the sky.

BACK TO BERLIN

NIGHT PEOPLE

(20th Century-Fox)

BACK in Berlin again, I'm beginning to feel like a young Mr. Isherwood of the 'fifties, peering into every café (but with something more than a camera's passive curiosity) for a post-war counterpart of Sally Bowles. I haven't found her yet, but, only a fortnight after The Man Between, the uneasy frontier, the kidnappers, the double-dealing, the pasts you can't be sure about are still here. As CinemaScope, Night People has no special merit that I can see, but by the narrow, flat standards of the post-talkie, pre-deepie era it's quite an entertaining film.

A young American corporal kisses his little fraulein good-night and 50 yards up the street is blackjacked and whisked off to the Soviet Zone. This much is told even before the credit titles go up. The film proper is about the efforts of the Americans under Colonel Van Dyke (Gregory Peck) to recover the young soldier. The colonel's invaluable assistant is his secretary (Rita Gam). The other woman in his life, of whom Miss Gam is exceedingly jealous, is apparently a former concentration camp victim (Anita Bjork), who loves no man nor ever will. She is an intermediary between East and West. But the most original ingredient in the story is the young corporal's father (Broderick Crawford), a business tycoon who, heralded by a mighty blast from all the American politicians whose ears he can reach, arrives by air in Berlin to see that no one relaxes till son John is safe. It wouldn't be fair to tell the end of the story—it's not quite as interesting, actually, as I had hoped—but on the way the tycoon has to face a nice problem in values and is made to realise that, unlike home-grown kidnappers, "bloodthirsty cannibals" like the Russians can't be bought with American dollars. The anti-Soviet angle is, of course, the done thing, but I didn't expect the picture of the unimaginative big-business American that the first half of the film provides. I'm bound to add, though, that in his gruff way poppa comes right in the end.

Night People, which is produced, directed and scripted (very effectively in the early stages) by Nunnally Johnson, is somewhat inconsequential in places, and its final shot—Mr. Peck in huge close-up (anything you can do I can do bigger) over a brassy patriotic tune—is pretty tasteless. But for a good part of the journey it holds the interest and has enough tension in the right places. I'm not a Peck fan, but he does a competent job in this film. Mr. Crawford also, a much more impressive actor, is up to standard. Considering her reputation, Miss Gam is not nearly as obtrusive as she might be, but of the women Miss Bjork, who had the lead in Miss Julie, is really the one to watch.

THE SEA AROUND US

(R.K.O. Radio)

I HAVE said before that I quickly tire of "pure" nature, and I was quite ready to become bored with a little over an hour of the sea around us. So it is high praise when I say that even after a first course of half an hour of True Life Disney (not to mention Leon Errol and a glimpse of Poppa Schine at the Kentucky Derby) I stayed interested to the end. It's a family picture, too. We all went along, and 24 hours afterwards my two boys are still re-enacting the gory whaling scenes—which doesn't, I fear, say much for their state of civilisation.

The Sea Around Us has a number of good qualities, but none more valuable than its variety. It doesn't give you a chance to become bored. It goes back to the beginning—to the birth of the earth and the oceans—and flows on beautifully through the sea's changing colours and temperament. There's a remarkable series of shots of microscopic life. Then we are at sea with ships and fishermen, or spectators of a fight (which might almost be a ballet) between shark and octopus. More humans are introduced: a shark walker, a crab herder, a deep-sea diver, a sponge gatherer, an under-water fisherman stalking some fearsome creature, a lighthouse keeper. A turtle lays its eggs and the young scuttle for the sea, preyed on by swooping gulls. It is all full of interest. My one regret (not a big one) is about the end—in the context just a little melodramatic, however real the threat of the melting ice-caps may be. The script by Irwin Allen, who also produced the film, is simple and direct—its "This is . . . these are . . ." form of narrative is surprisingly unmonotonous. I haven't read Rachel L. Carson's book, but if it is anything like as good as its film translation its popularity isn't surprising.

BEAR COUNTRY

(Disney-R.K.O. Radio)

LIKE Mr. Disney's earlier True Life Adventures, Bear Country is a delightful film, especially remarkable for its close-ups. Covering a season from thaw to snowfall, it gives a lively picture of the life of the brown bear as it grows up, of its parents, and of the other animal life of the bear country—hawks learning to fly, a moose learning to walk, young coyotes, a rattlesnake and so on.

predominate and the programme sound unbalanced and blurred. This is because most speakers, receiver cabinets and rooms have natural resonances, usually among the lower notes, and increased volume brings them into play. Undue emphasis is placed on these notes in consequence. Anyone who has tried using an ordinary domestic receiver to supply, say, dance music for a ball will realise what is meant. The music becomes almost unrecognisable.

The placing of the listener's set can also have considerable effects on the quality of reproduction. The best results are usually obtained by placing the set diagonally in a corner of the room. One corner will often be found better than the others, but convenience is, of course, the final determining factor. The cabinet should always be kept a few inches clear of the walls of the room, otherwise unpleasant resonances are likely to develop.

High fidelity enthusiasts (commonly known as HI FIs) have in recent years developed some extraordinarily efficient speaker systems, but for the average listener their size and expense will be too great. The modest enthusiast will be content with one of the better standard receiving sets, or, if he desires a separate speaker, with one of the excellent 10 or 12-inch models available. The speaker is best mounted in a special cabinet with a low resonance or on a baffle board three or four feet square. This can then be placed in the most favourable part of the room with the receiver itself situated handy to the most comfortable chair. Music lovers will find that the bigger, separate speaker will give a better bass and often a better top-note response. With orchestral programmes, for instance, it has the effect of "enlarging" the orchestra, not in volume but in the clarity of tone and the number of instruments unmistakably heard.

History and Horticulture

WHEN T. D. Lennie retired from the 3YA Garden Session two years ago he did not give up his interest in either horticulture or broadcasting, and listeners who tune to this station at 7.15 p.m. on Tuesday, June 22, will hear the first of two talks by him on The Origin of the Plant Species. "I am convinced," says Mr. Lennie, "that many people will welcome information regarding the origin of our present-day plants and trees, and with that idea in mind have dug into the past to learn something of plant history. It has turned out a very fascinating experience." Mr. Lennie starts by pointing out that records go back to about 4000 B.C. The Eastern Mediterranean, he says, was undoubtedly the world's centre in those early days—after the Flood it became the nursery of many of our present-day fruits. Among these the grape, the fig and the apricot were of great commercial importance. Mr. Lennie goes on to discuss the distribution of these and other species. The second of these two talks will be broadcast on June 29.

Dinner in a Dish

A COMPLETE main course cooked in a single container is a grand idea; and a big casserole, whether of oven glass or aluminium, is one of the most useful cooking dishes in the kitchen. Oven glass is the best, because it can be put straight on the table, keeping the dinner hot, and saving washing up! Also, less expensive cuts of meat can be made tender by long, slow cooking in the oven in a casserole; and as the vegetables are cooked with the meat, the flavour of both is blended and improved. Moreover, there is no loss of vegetable or meat juices by straining. The Chinese have always recognised the value of one-dish meals. Many people, however, do not wish to have long oven-cooked meals, from motives of economy; and for these, a big thick saucepan with well-fitting lid is the thing; although, for my own part, I prefer the oven method, with the heat down very low. People with a fuel stove find it excellent, too. Here are some ideas for both methods.

Swiss Steak

This useful recipe can be started overnight, or early in the day, and then left in pantry or refrigerator until about 3/4 hour before dinner, when the vegetables are added. For 4 people, get 2 lb. beef steak, about 1/4 inch thick, and cut it into 4 pieces. Mix 1/4 cup flour with 1 teaspoon salt and 1/2 teaspoon pepper, and pound this well into the steak both sides, with the edge of a saucer, which helps to tenderise it. Now brown the steak on both sides in hot fat (or a little salad oil); also brown a couple of sliced onions. Add a tin of undiluted tomato soup and an equal quantity of water (measure with the soup tin). Cover tightly, and simmer gently about 35 minutes, or until the meat begins to be tender. Leave it aside now, with the lid raised, until an hour before dinner time. Then bring to simmering point, add 4 whole potatoes if not too large (or just halved) and 3 scraped carrots, quartered, and simmer about 25 minutes; taste and add more seasoning if necessary. Then take a package of frozen peas, break it in half, and put half on each side of the dinner, pushing the peas partly down into the juices. Cover, and cook again about 15 minutes, when the peas and all will be tender.

American Hot Pot

Four shoulder chops of hogget or lamb. Trim off fat and heat it in thick saucepan (or Dutch oven). Add the chops, and one minced clove of garlic, and brown well on both sides. Tuck in 4 small whole onions and 4 pared medium small potatoes, halved, around the chops, and under them as much as possible. Add a package of frozen green beans, 1/4 teaspoon ground cloves, 2 teaspoons salt, 1/8 teaspoon pepper, and a tin of undiluted mushroom soup or asparagus soup; add 1/2 tin water. Cover tightly and cook very slowly about an hour or until mixture is tender. Thicken gravy as desired, and sprinkle with paprika.

Veal and Sausage Skillet

You need 4 large pork sausages and a slice of veal cutlet about 3/4 lb., pounded very thin. In a large thick saucepan brown the sausages lightly. Cut the veal into 4 pieces and wrap each piece around a sausage; fasten with toothpick; roll in well-seasoned flour. Brown these rolls all over in remaining sausage-fat in the saucepan, then remove. To the fat add a sliced medium onion and 3/4 cup of well-washed rice; cook, stirring, 5 or 6 minutes. Then add the meat rolls, 1/2 cup thinly-sliced celery, a tin of tomatoes (3 1/2 cupfuls), a tablespoon of Worcester sauce, a teaspoon of salt and a shake of pepper. Cover tightly and simmer, stirring occasionally, about 45 minutes, or until veal rolls and rice are tender and liquid has been absorbed. Serve sprinkled with parsley.

Pork Chop Dinner

Have ready 4 loin pork chops, and a package of frozen peas. Let the peas thaw while you prepare the rest of the dish. Sprinkle the chops with salt and pepper, and brown them well on both sides in a heavy saucepan in a tablespoon of fat, salad oil, or bacon fat, with a split clove of garlic. Set the chops aside and discard the garlic. To the fat in the pan add 2 tablespoons sugar, 2 tablespoons cornflour, 1/2 teaspoon dried rosemary, and 1/2 teaspoon salt. Gradually stir in 1 1/2 cups hot water, and cook, stirring, until thick and glossy. Stir in 2 or 3 tablespoons lemon juice and 1/4 cup orange juice. Set an orange slice on each pork chop; arrange them in the sauce. Cover and cook over low heat for 30 minutes. Add the broken-up block of peas and sufficient boiled and strained small whole potatoes (In America these are canned). Cook, covered, basting occasionally with the sauce, 20 minutes. Then uncover and cook 10 minutes longer.

M. Jackson

Savoury Mince

Chop finely a large onion and boil it a few minutes in about 1 1/2 cups vegetable water (saved when straining potatoes, parsnips). If you have a little meat stock, use that, too, or stir in a small teaspoonful of vegetable extract. Season with a little pepper and salt (to taste)—and if you like curry, stir in a teaspoonful or so. Then add about 1 1/2 lb. raw minced beef, and simmer gently 10 minutes. If you like, add a little Worcester sauce — these seasonings depend on individual taste.

"Ready, steady—"

N.Z. LISTENER, JUNE 18, 1954.

Then moisten about 1½ tablespoons wholemeal flour with a little water, and stir it in, to thicken the mince. Now pour it all into a deep casserole, cover with a pastry top, and then put on the well-buttered lid of the casserole. Make the pastry with just a cupful of flour sifted with a teaspoon of baking powder, a tablespoon of butter rubbed in, and enough milk or milk and water to make a soft dough. Bake about ½ hour. The pastry should be beautifully brown when you take off lid. Serve in casserole.

New Zealand Goulash

Slice 2-3 onions, and cut up a pound of veal into cubes. Fry these together in a little bacon fat until brown. Transfer to the casserole, pour over it 2 cups brown stock and season with a little paprika. Put it into the oven at about 350 degrees. Meanwhile, add a little more fat to that in the frying-pan, and brown in it a cupful each of slices of carrots and of turnip, some tiny whole onions, and 2 cupfuls raw potatoes cut into little balls like the onions. Add vegetables and some salt to casserole when meat is partly cooked. Finish cooking, adding more stock if necessary. Cook at least 2 hours. Thicken gravy with browned flour if desired.

Pickling Beetroot

Dear Aunt Daisy,

I hope I am not too late with this method of doing beetroot. One good thing about it is that it keeps after the bottle has been opened. I just screw the lid on again and use when next I need beetroot. Boil together for 5 minutes 1 cup vinegar, 1 cup brown sugar, a teaspoon cinnamon, 1 teaspoon salt, 4 or 5 cloves. Add cut-up beetroot, bring to boil again; then place in warm jars and screw down. The beet is to be first boiled in water until tender, then peeled and cut into slices. "M.E.B."

Opossum Skins

Dear Aunt Daisy,

Could you tell me, through The Listener, how are opossum skins cured or tanned, as I have 18 blue ones given me. I would like to use some of the skins to trim an overcoat, with the fur.

"Aleesh," Hunterville.

I've enquired of several people, and find that the method of curing lamb skin is generally successful. First peg out the opossum skin on a board, pelt uppermost, and scrape quite clean with a blunt knife or a piece of brick. When dry and stretched, proceed as follows. Do not get the fur wet. Boil 2 tablespoons alum and 1 tablespoon salt in 1 pint water till dissolved. When at blood heat, wash pelt with it, putting plenty on. Roll skin up, folding pelt to pelt, keeping mixture away from wool or hair. Leave for 2 days. Repeat process twice, giving three dressings altogether. Then spread out to dry away from sun and wind. While drying, frequently stretch and pull and rub between hands to soften. When nearly dry, work with a blunt knife, or rub with pumice stone or piece of brick, until skin is as soft as suede.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE -

Without Calomel - And You'll Jump out of Bed in the Morning Full of Vim.

The liver should pour out two pints of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Wind bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, tired and weary and the world looks blue.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pints of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle yet amazing in making bile flow freely.

Ask for CARTER'S Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. Distributors: Fasset & Johnson Ltd., Levy Buildings, Manners Street, Wellington, C.3

IN 1935 an ex-pupil of the Palmerston North Boys' High School, Lloyd Hardie, joined the staff of 2ZF (Palmerston North B Station) as an announcer, and at that time he was one of the youngest announcers in New Zealand. His work also included programme organising, and conducting a children's session under the name of "Uncle Phil." When the secretary of the Manawatu Radio Club (which ran Station 2ZF) retired, he took over. In 1938 he joined 2ZA Palmerston North as a contract announcer. He is married, has two children, and is the eldest son of J. R. Hardie, former Town Clerk of Palmerston North, who retired recently.

He started early

This information is in reply to a request by "Whodunit" (Feilding).

AARON COPLAND'S first full-length opera The Tender Land—libretto by Horace Everett—was given its world premiere in New York recently by the New York City Centre Opera. The New York Times said that the work was "heard with every sign of respect and appreciation, but the impression was of a reception somewhat conditional." The New York

Open Microphone

Herald Tribune found the opera "lacking in the inner compulsion, the sheer verve and spontaneity that have made Copland's orchestral pieces a major contribution to the repertoire." The reviewer added: "What the composer has achieved, however, is to create a genuine atmosphere piece that breathes, smells, even feels like the Mid-West (of the United States)."

Aaron Copland (the original family name is Kaplan, the change being due to a mistake on the part of immigration officials at the reception of his parents in New York) was born in New York in 1900. He took his first lessons from his sister, and then studied with Wittgenstein, Wolfsohn, and Adler and others. His earliest music was abstract and severe, but an absorbing interest in jazz and American folk music produced Music for the Theatre and El Salon Mexico. His mature compositions have a highly personal and poetic stamp and include Appalachian Spring, Lincoln Portrait, Our Town, and the ballet scores, Hear Ye! Hear Ye! and Rodeo. His Billy the Kid, a cowboy ballet suite, has been described as some of the most exciting and popular ballet music done in America. It has been heard from NZBS stations, played by the RCA Victor Symphony Orchestra under Leonard Bernstein.

YEHUDI MENUHIN was recently criticised by a section of the London Press for his decision not to fly for the time being, and in a letter to The Times he has explained his motive. This, he says, "is dictated not by fright, but by a compelling impulse besetting a surviving itinerant violinist—and one who never shrank from flying in bombers and under all conditions of war and peace when he felt it in the line of duty—to take a constructive stand in the light of (1) the type of accident which has caused, upon three separate occasions, the deaths of three cherished colleagues, and (2) the puzzle of why this decimation should particularly affect the ranks of my companions. In each case owing to impaired visibility the flight was abruptly terminated against an immovable object. Surely the most primitive of radar instruments can detect a mountainside dead ahead?

Surely it is not asking too much that such equipment be installed in all aircraft? . . . I am confident that I will fly again because I have faith in man's ability to conquer all odds. . . ."

(The three colleagues referred to by Menuhin are presumably William Kapell, Ossy Renardy and Ginette Neveu. Kapell was killed in October, and Ossy Renardy in December, 1953; Ginette Neveu met her death in October, 1949.)

PIER ANGELI, a young film star, is shown here broadcasting for the BBC. Anna-Maria Pierangeli, just and looking little more than half that age, is CRIED AND RAN one of twin sisters born in Cagliari, capital of the Italian island of Sardinia. The little girl always loved the theatre and went to the opera with her parents; but she had little real inclination to adopt a stage career herself. Here was a rare case, however, of her mother holding different views, and in 1948 she was taken to tea at the house of a retired actress, Rena di Liguoro, to meet the French producer-director Leonide

IN Preston, England, there's a cobbler's shop where the shoe-maker and mender, named Calvert, cobbles all day. There is no call for a night shift (as in "Chu Chin Chow") since the cobbler's son is Eddie Calvert, one of England's leading musicians and known as "the man with the golden trumpet." Calvert is heard in many BBC programmes. When he was eight his father made him practise for three-quarters of an hour a day. Still in the shop are the music stand and the stick with which papa pointed out mistakes. The trumpet has graduated in the musical scale—it's gold-plated and worth £350. Eddie Calvert's recording of "O Mein Papa" is expected to sell 3,000,000 records all over the world.

LET'S LEARN MAORI

THE next set of Lessons in Maori (Nos. 11 to 15) is summarised here. This weekly series, prepared for the NZBS Talks Department by W. T. Ngata, of the Department of Maori Affairs, has already started at 1YZ. It will begin at 2YZ on June 21, 1YA on June 28, and 2YA on July 26. (Listeners should keep this and succeeding panels for reference.)

(Lesson 11.) Some nouns in Maori have one vowel lengthened in the plural, e.g., singular, ma-tua (first vowel short, parents), tu-puna (ancestor), ta-ngata (man), wa-hine (woman); plural, ma-tua (long vowel, parents), tu-puna (ancestors), ta-ngata (men), wa-hine (women). The short "a" is shown here thus, "a-" and the long "a" as "a-".

(Lesson 12.) Further list of nouns: Singular, tua-hine (sister) tua-kana (brother), tei-na (younger brother or sister); plural, tua-hine (sisters), tua-kana (brothers), tei-na (younger brothers or sisters).

(Lesson 13.) Summary of rules for formation of the number of the noun: (a) definitive method, te tepu (singular) the table, nga tepu (plural) the tables; (b) lengthening vowel, te ta-ngata (singular) the man, nga ta-ngata (plural) the men; (c) te tamaiti (singular) the child, nga tamaiti (plural) the children.

(Lesson 14.) The possessive particles ta and to are the equivalent in Maori of the apostrophe s ('s), e.g., ta Hoani—John's, or to Hoani—John's (singular forms), a Hoani (plural of ta Hoani), o Hoani (plural of to Hoani).

(Lesson 15.) Personal pronouns: Singular—Ahau or Au (I), koe (you), ia (he or she); dual, taua (you and I), maua (he and I), korua (you two), raua (they two); plural, tatou (you and I), matou (they and I), koutou (you), ratou (they).

Moguy. For years Moguy had wanted to make a film. Tomorrow is Too Late, always hoping to find for the leading role an actress who, though an adolescent, had a depth of understanding far beyond her age. Directly he saw Anna-Maria Pierangeli, he knew he had found the actress he wanted, but Anna-Maria, when asked to walk about before him and read a few lines of script, burst into tears and ran home.

After a few weeks of persistent persuasion on the part of her mother and the producer, she gave in and, helped by the sympathy and kindness of the great director, appeared in the film. It was awarded a prize for the year's best Italian film, while she received a prize for the best Italian actress's performance of the year. And so Anna-Maria Pierangeli was seen by the great ones of the film world, snapped up by Hollywood and rechristened—for some reason or other—Pier Angeli.

This girl who had to be almost driven to accepting an opportunity thousands of girls positively ache for is now a big star. But she doesn't seem to have lost the enviable freshness which is her great asset. She is described as very simple, she uses no make-up and, by Hollywood standards, she leads a quiet life.

DURING the voyage from America to England an American harpist, Robert Maxwell, who was booked to appear at the London Palladium, filled in the time by writing a tune he called "Ebb

THE EBB TIDE." The young FLOWED British bandleader Frank Chacksfield, happening to stroll into a music publisher's office, spotted the manuscript lying on a desk. He borrowed it and recorded it. That recording of "Ebb Tide" became immensely popular, not only in Britain but in America, where many hundreds of thousands of copies have been sold.

THE problem of adapting for radio a Dickens novel, teeming with subplots, characters, incidents, and descriptive matter is a formidable one; so Charles Lefeaux, who adapted and produced Nicholas Nickleby for the BBC

"HERE'S RICHNESS" set rules on his work. His first task was to sheer away anything which did not further the development of the plot; his second, to dramatise fully (except for the opening narration of each episode) and not allow the voice of the narrator to intrude or interrupt; his third, to remember that many characters admirable on the printed page are disastrous in the studio, either because they impede the story or speak in so literary a way that actors are quite unable to make them sound convincing. But even with the pruning knife applied "here's richness"—to quote Mr. Squeers. Gordon Davies, who plays Nicholas, is a Birmingham man with a great deal of experience in repertory, the West End of London, on the air and in television.

He was one of the actors who played Dick Barton, hero of many juvenile listeners to the BBC's programmes. He has many interests apart from his work, although more than anything else he enjoys acting and watching other people act, both on the stage and screen. He's fond of music and reading, and tennis and walking keep him happily occupied when out of doors. Nicholas Nickleby (12 episodes) has finished at 2, 3, 4ZB and 2ZA, but it is still running at 1ZB on Sunday evenings.

MRS. U. G. MORRIS (Tahuna, Nelson): The name of the singer is Xenia Belmas, and she is a Continental artist. Books of musical reference and other musical authorities consulted here contribute little else about her.

ALMA COGAN, the singer in the BBC's new Take It From Here, is also the singer in a new Morecambe and Wise comedy series on television called Running Wild.

The Les Paul-Mary Ford disc "Vaya Con Dios" is destined to become a Capitol record best seller. By February this year, six months after its release, it had topped the two million sales mark and was placed only four hundred thousand behind Pee Wee Hunt's "12th Street Rag." This popular recording will be included in a programme by Les Paul and Mary Ford at 6.30 this evening from 3ZB.

Frank Luther pioneered folk music recording in the days before Burl Ives was heard of. He resisted the temptation to become "popularised," preferring to remain a friendly voice with a guitar. 4ZB presents Frank Luther and his partner in song, Zora Layman, at 4 o'clock.

2ZA's "Country Digest" at 12.34 p.m., features a recorded interview with Charles Dondero dealing with the subject of Anti-Biotics.

on washday...

You can—when you have a BENDIX—for there's really nothing for you to do. Just set the dials, switch on, and let the BENDIX do the rest. A housewife's dream, you say? Not at all. It's just the one sure way of escaping from the mess, the drudgery, the wasted hours of the old-fashioned way—soaking, washing, rinsings, wringing, and all those heavy liftings of water-laden clothes.

Now, it's goodbye to all that! The BENDIX does every one of these things... in just the right amount of water (water rationer) always at just the right temperature (temperature controller) in the right order and for just the right length of time (automatic timer). It does the whole job from first to last automatically... perfectly!

It's completely
AUTOMATIC!

Top places on recent hit parades were filled by tunes originally written for stage shows or movie scores. "Oh My Papa" is from a Swiss-German musical. "That's Amore" is from the Paramount picture "The Caddy." 3ZB features these and other hits from shows and films at 6.45.

Les Baxter, a rising handleader, searches for the new and dramatic in sound. His recent L.P.'s called "Music out of the Moon" features the "Theremin," a modernistic musical instrument. Les Baxter's music may be heard from 4ZB at 4 o'clock.

Every Tuesday afternoon at half past one 2ZA presents "Here Comes the Bride," a programme about the many-sided aspects of weddings and their preparations, conducted by Margot.

Housework is hard . . . until you find relief from BACKACHE

No wonder housework is hard . . . no wonder there seems more to do than one pair of hands can possibly manage . . . for backache turns the most ordinary tasks into weary toil. But when backache is due to sluggish kidneys, that is a trouble you can soon put right. Yes, soon . . . because many women gain relief simply by relying on De Witt's Pills. This diuretic medicine acts promptly to stimulate sluggish kidneys back to normal activity, so that harmful waste matter is expelled from the system. So, if you have this heavy burden of backache, De Witt's Pills come to you with the heartfelt recommendations of grateful people all around you. From chemists everywhere.

DeWitt's Pills

For Rheumatic and Joint Pains, Backache, etc. Prices 4/- and 7/- (inc. tax).

Duke Ellington was born in Washington in 1899. After winning a scholarship in Fine Art at the Pratt Institute, he studied painting and music and played the piano at parties and night clubs. His desire to write true Negro music was so strong that he refrained from studying composition in case it affected his creative ideas. Since then he has become famous as a dance band leader, and as a composer of music that captures the different Negro idioms in their true forms. At 10 o'clock this evening 3ZB will feature Duke Ellington in a group of his own compositions.

Latin-American music is often associated with the music of Spain. There is a similarity in rhythm which leads to this popular fallacy, but in actual fact rumbas, mambos, tangos and the rest are African in spirit and origin, having arrived in the new world with Negro slaves imported to work Cuban sugar plantations. 4ZB features Latin music at 6.30 p.m.

"A yard of Tuning —"

that's Regent BANDSPREAD

See how much easier it is to tune a station properly (picture at left) on a dial 16 times larger. That's what "Bandspread" means. On a fully bandspread radio the "short-wave" band is magnified and spread out into seven separate wavebands; each one the same size as the whole "short-wave" on an ordinary radio.

BETTER SHORT-WAVE LISTENING

There's no better fully bandspread radio on the market than the Regent "Peeress." The cabinet of faultless walnut veneer and the quality 5-valve receiving set of the most modern design make the Regent "Peeress" a radio you'll be proud to own. See and hear it for yourself—today. Also available: The Regent "Premier" Model 5W3. A deluxe 5-valve BROADCAST set in the cabinet shown.

Regent "Peeress"

R76.12 5 valves, 8 wavebands, bandspread. Model 5B3.

RHEUMATISM? NOT ME!

People say to me, "You're so active for your age," but why shouldn't I be, when I keep Rheumatism at bay with a daily dose of Kruschen.

The first twinge of Rheumatism made me decide to follow the lead of millions of others and get ready and welcome relief with Kruschen Salts. Rheumatism is often the result of an accumulation of excess acids and impurities in the system, and Kruschen gets at the root of the trouble by helping to correct faulty elimination.

You know, one is only as old as one feels, and you'll feel as young as I do when you keep fit with a daily dose of Kruschen Salts.

Buy Kruschen today and take it every day. Just a tiny pinch in your early morning tea. Manufactured in New Zealand for E. Griffiths Hughes Ltd., England. New Zealand Agents: Fairbairn Wright Ltd., Auckland, Wellington, Christchurch, Dunedin and Invercargill. K3

For those who like Latin-American or Spanish music with a more sophisticated touch, tune into 3ZB at 3.30 for Pepe Nunez and his Spanish Argentinian Orchestra.

Two good things that arose from the British Music Hall are still flourishing, the Gilbert and Sullivan patter songs and the modern Cockney items that Billy Cotton does so well. Some of the latter will be heard from 4ZB at 10.15 p.m.

At 6.15 every Thursday evening, 2ZA broadcasts "Wild Life," the interesting and informative series about the world of nature, conducted by Crosbie Morrison.

Nature's own Miracle Fabric!

Trade names appearing in Commercial Division programmes are published by arrangement.

"Charlie Kunz at the Keyboard," from 4ZB at 4.30, means music to set the feet tapping. To the delight of his fans Charlie is now back at the piano after an operation on one hand.

Violinists who play light music, and who are of high enough standard to have their names on record labels, are few and far between. Florian Zabach falls into this category, and he's the artist featured in 2ZA's "Evening Star" at 6.30.

To arouse discussion, evoke memories and test your musical knowledge, are the objects of "Armchair Questionnaire," a new family quiz for the fire-side. And if 4ZB listeners don't want to put on thinking caps at a quarter to nine on Saturday evenings, the programme also provides plenty of musical entertainment and information.

Strange stories from widely separate and sometimes little-known parts of the world are featured in "The Four Corners and Seven Seas," which is broadcast from 2ZA every Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

For Men who appreciate true Craftsmanship..
