The Last Journey

"NEAR Scott was a lamp formed from a tin, and some lamp-wick. . . It had been used to burn the little methylated spirit which remained. I think that Scott had used it to help him to write up to the end. I feel sure that he had died last—and once I had thought that he could not go so far as some of the others. We never realised how strong that man was, mentally and physically, until now." As he wrote, Apsley Cherry-Garrard, assistant zoologist to Dr. Wilson on the expedition, must have remembered the happier time when the Terra Nova put in to Port Chalmers on Sunday, November 27, 1910. Next day Scott saw Mr. Walker, the Mayor of Dunedin, attended a dance at the home of W. F. Edmund, and had dinner at the Fernhill Club.

On Wednesday, November 30, the Terra Nova with her crew of bronzed, hardy "young lions," as the Evening Star's reporter called them, went down the harbour, escorted by the Omakura, the Lady Roberts and the Waikana, besides a great number of yachts and other small craft. The tug Plucky cast off her lines and at 3.20 p.m. the Terra Nova left New Zealand.

NORMAN GRIFFITHS

Scott's Last Port, a programme arranged by Charles Joye and produced by Norman Griffiths to commemorate the 43rd anniversary of Captain Scott's departure from Port Chalmers will be heard from 4YC at 8.30 p.m. on Monday, November 29.
