- 8.14 Delius and Holst: This century has seen a great resurgence in British art; as music released itself from the shackles of the Victorian era there emerged besides others, the significant compositions of Frederick Delius and Gustav Holst
- Delius has sometimes been accused of composing mere "background music," and of writing always in the same idiom. But this criticism arises from the works of his later period, the widely known short descriptive pieces for small orchestra. "It is wonderful that he gets so far, using the same means," was one critic's verdict. However, Delius's music states its own case for versatility. It is the ideal counterpart of English lyric poetry, and like the poetry has an infinite variety of form, emotion and colouring.
- Song of the High Hills
- The Royal Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham
- (First of a series of nine)
- Gustav Holst was deeply interested in anything with a mystical tinge such as folk lore, the Orient, and astrology. The result of his studies in the last of these was his Op. 32, the monumental Planets Suite.
