HERE, at last, is the book of cricket hints that you have been waiting for. A book that, without doubt, will help to lift the game on to a higher plane. The advice it contains is written by four famous cricket exponents and the outstanding illustrations which accompany the advice are the result of experience gained over the years in first-class cricket. The hints are not merely theory. They embody the lessons learned in match play, and, as such, are definitely authoritative.

EVERY phase of the game is covered by these four experts. The advice is given in such simple language that anyone can follow it. Text and illustrations admirably demonstrate the methods adopted by the greatest batsmen in the world. Then come some ideas from the fertile brain of Arthur Mailey, illustrated with his delightfully humorous sketches, and finally we pass to the world's greatest wicket-keeper, W. A. Oldfield. The fruits of all their experience gathered in one book.

BATTING—BOWLING—WICKET-KEEPING—GENERAL

(By Don Bradman)

(By Arthur Mailey)

(By
W. A. Oldfield)

(By
A. G. Moyes)

D. G. Bradman and W. A. Oldfield are world figures of the moment, the former the greatest batsman in the world, and the latter without a peer as a wicketkeeper. To natural skill they have allied keen and analytical brains, and the combination has taken them to the top of the ladder of fame. Arthur Mailey was one of the greatest of slow bowlers, a Test Match winner of unusual skill—the only man who, in the history of Test Matches, has taken 9 wickets in an innings. A. G. Moyes played for both South Australia and Victoria, and was chosen in 1914 in the Australian team that was to tour South Africa. He also represented the Dominions' Army against the English Army during the War, and was a New South Wales selector. Think what a fund of knowledge they can give you.
