QUENTIN THE SECOND

WHEN he was 21, Alexander Morvaren (Alick) Maclean composed a three-act opera on the subject of Scott's novel, "Quentin Durward." Under that name the work won the prize offered by the Moody-Manners Opera Company for the best romantic opera. In course of time the young composer (who was to become a noted English conductor) took unto himself a wife, and a son who blessed this union was named after the hero of father's prize opera. Quentin Maclean, like his romantic namesake, had cause to be grateful to the Continent for equipping him for the splendid career he now pursues. He is one of our finest concert organists, and will be heard from 2YA on Saturday, 2YA be heard from October 26.
