A never-failing help in time of trouble for Lionel Barrymore in "You Can't Take It With You" is his mouth-organ, here being played to Jean Arthur. On the right: Clark Gable and Myrna Loy as "trouble-shooters" in "Too Hot To Handle," M.G.M. comedy-drama based on the proposition that there are no dull moments in the life of a newsreel cameraman.

MIRAMS

Left: The story of Johann Strauss comes again to the screen in "The Great Waltz," with Belgian actor Fernand Gravet portraying the Viennese maestro. Centre: You can't be a true Westerner, they say, till you can roll a cigarette with one hand, so Gary Cooper gives Merle Oberon a lesson in this scene from Goldwyn's "The Cowboy and the Lady." Below: Hollywood, or rather David O. Selznick, discovers another weird and wonderful family in "The Young In Heart." Shown here are Douglas Fairbanks, jun., and Paulette Goddard.
