Standard Frequencies

American Scheme

SPONSORED by the American Radio

Relay League, an amateur organization, the work of transmitting standard frequency signals has been carried out for a period of over 12 months. So reliable have been the transmitted signals that other countries have adopted the transmitted frequencies as standard. The signals transmitted by WIXP, the main station, are accurate within one part in a million, while W9XAN is accurate within one part in ten thousand. The Wireless Institute of Australia has made arrangements to use the same idea by allotting two stations as markers for the top and bottom of the 41-42.8 metre waveband. These stations are required to transmit a modulated carrier wave at certain periods when other stations can make their calibrations.
