ACCORDING to recent statistics there were 280,610 owners of wireless apparatus in Holland in April, 1933, and a further 291,628 subscribers to the radio distribution network. The proportion of listeners to population is high, working out at roughly 7 per cent. No registration is in force in Holland, and figures relating to the number of wireless enthusiasts are based on the membership of broadcasting associations; it is therefore estimated that Holland must possess at least another hundred thousand or more "free lances."
