

M.T.M. MUTTERINGS

It is very gratifying to note the splendid response to the AEWS classes by members of the 3 M.T. Workshops.

5 Working on the wonders of welding, 3 wallowing in wood-work, 15 gallantly digesting Diesel.

Astronomical Research by Haywire has been rewarded recently, by the discovery of terrific bands of Nimbus Clouds in the vicinity of Hut 5, "A" Block.

(Ed. We wish M.T.M. would let us in on this joke)

Readers in need of expert detection ability will no doubt be pleased of S/Sgt. Barry's intention to open and operate a "Super-Snoopers" Agency in No 7 Bay. Nasal Sensitivity to the fumes emanating from the various brands of petrol is his main theme for deducing crime this week.

Don't forget to take your problems to BARRY'S BENZINE BUREAU. A word of advice to the "owner & trainer" of this Agency "Remember that all trucks have two sides".

The Upstairs Section of the Workshops spent a few hours undoing knotty problems one night recently. Mostly in pyjama cords we believe.

ARMY V AIR FORCE

According to our "Gossip Grub" the incident started in the form of a small fire in the vicinity of Camp. The race was on between the fire services of the Army and R.N.Z.A.F. The latter gained the decision by a mere radiator cap.

To work went the Victor and on the arrival of our "Flame destroyers" it was seen that a corporal in blue was playing his hose on to one section of the fire.

Alas WOII Hellreigal was not to be outdone and snatching the hose from the Corporal in blue proceeded to demonstrate the correct method of attacking a fire.

It is understood that much of the fire and many of the personnel in the vicinity received their share of the erratic flow of water.

So you see, after a bad start the Army finished up in front. More power to the Firemen.
